WEDDED AT LAST.

CHAPTER XL.

Shirley hesitated and shrank back. Was any one there? she wondered fearfully. Was it some one who needed help? Ought she to open it? Or was it all the effect of her excited imagination, her fancy which had conjured up that face which had seemed to look at her through the window? Since that was necessary—for the dead do not come back—a delusion of her senses, the noise outside must have been so also. Why would want to rob her? she thought with a smile. What a silly fearful coward she was growing! Nervin herself for a desperate effort, she opened the door, and Jip sprang out joyfully.

The snow was falling heavily, and some great heavy flakes were carried into the little passage. Shirley shrank back, then went forward bravely. As she crossed the threshold of the door, her foot struck against something lying there, and she bent down anxiously.

The snow, falling so heavily over the road and hedges, had fallen also on a prostrate figure stretched senseless outside her door, and Jip was scratching vigorously at the snow trying to disinter it. With an exclamation of pity and compassion and dread, Shirley tried to distinguish who it was; but it was too dark. She guessed that it was a man who lay there and that he was sorely in need of her assistance. Bending down, she spoke to him and tried to rouse him; but it was in vain. He lay like a log, senseless and stupefied; and it was only with the greatest difficulty and with an immense exertion of strength that she succeeded in dragging him into the passage. Jip following with little satisfied demonstrations of joy. Then, having laid him down, she turned and once more bolted the door behind her, leaning against it, panting and breathless from her exertion.

After a minute or two, she recovered sufficiently to bend over the man whom she had succored. There was not light enough in the passage to distinguish his features, but she felt that his heart beat, feebly indeed, but perceptibly; and she took courage. Once more she lifted him by the shoulders and dragged him into the sitting room, leaving his there for a moment while she ran for pillows, in which she raised his head. As she did so, his hair fell back from his forehead, disclosing the face upturned and senseless.

Merciful Heaven, whose face was that? Was it another delusion, or was it—? The next moment a shriek of terror rang through the quiet house.

CHAPTER XLII.

The Christmas holidays were over and the village school had begun again. Mrs. Grant was looking rather worn and haggard; but the cold weather tried her, she said; and she was even more patient than was her wont with the girls, who were not improved by their holidays or rendered more willing to work. It was a very weary which bent over the desk while the children had departed one afternoon and Shirley was alone. She was busy counting up the marks, ready Oliphant was to give some prize, the distribution of which had been postponed on account of the absence of the squire and his daughter.

Some singular change had taken place in Shirley during the past few days. It was not merely that she was paler and sadder even than usual, but there was a strange nervousness about her manner; an uncertainty, an indecision, a shrinking which were very different from her former quiet ease of manner, which had always been so remarkable. An sudden noise seemed to startle her. She rarely left the house, except during the time she was teaching; and she dismissed the little maid who had attended upon her, employing her only for an hour or two in the morning to go down to the village to get the necessary supplies.

These changes had not failed to strike the inhabitants of Erindale, and much curiosity had been felt about the dismissal of little Jane Austen, whose bright, helpful ways had always made her a favorite with Shirley. That she had no fault to find with the child was evident from the kindness of her manner toward her; and Mrs. Austen, on paying the schoolmistress a visit, had received an assurance that Jane was a very good girl and a useful little maid; and Shirley had no better reason to give for her dismissal than that she was going to try to do without any help for a little time. Mrs. Austen had gone away shaking her head and prophesying that Mrs. Grant would make herself ill with the work.

The school closed at three o'clock during the winter months, so that it was still daylight when the children trooped away, shouting and laughing, delighted to leave off lessons and to take to sliding and snow-balling—for the snow was still resting on the hills and the weather was bitterly cold.

They were in the very thick of a snow-balling match, flushed and excited, when Madge Oliphant appeared coming up the hill, and the snow-balling ceased, while the rosy faces were turned toward Madge with a smile of welcome.

"Well, girls, you are having a good time of it?" she said, in her bright sweet voice. "You are making plenty of noise; and I am sure it is not fair that poor Mrs. Grant should have your noise out of school hours as well as in! Suppose you go down to the next field and continue operation; and if any one tries to stop you, you can say that I gave you leave."

They trooped off, carrying their shouts and laughter into field on the right hand side of the hollow, and Madge walked on and entered the school house, the bright eyes softening into tenderness and compassion as she saw the slender bowed figure leaning over the desk. As she entered, Shirley looked up with a start which faded as she saw who the intruder was; and Madge came toward her, looking so bright and sweet in her sealskin and furs that the bare empty-looking room was brightened by her presence.

"Miss Oliphant, I did not know you had returned," Shirley said, as she rose to meet her; and Madge too her hands, and looked wistfully into her face.

"We came home last night," she said gently, as she lifted her sweeps to meet Shirley's kiss. "An how have you been? How pale you are!"

"Am I? But I am always paler you know. Have you enjoyed yourself, my child? Have you had pleasant visits?"

"Very pleasant," said Madge, gasping, the color deepening a little in her face. "I will tell you all about it presently. I am going to have to talk to you. Why," she added suddenly, as Shirley began hurriedly to gather her papers together, stooping to them to hide her expressive countenance, "are you not pleased to see me? You naughty girl! I have been looking forward so ardently to chat with you!"

"I am pleased to see you, of course," Shirley said hurriedly. "What could make you suppose otherwise?"

"Your face," said Madge, quietly. "You look as if my proposal had startled you. Have you not enough in the house?" she added laughingly.

"I dare say there is enough to make up a cup," Shirley answered, forcing a smile. "Shall we go in, Miss Oliphant? It is cold here; the fire is gone out."

"And your poor little hands are frozen," said Miss Oliphant, chafing them tenderly between her own, putting her arm round Shirley.

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Their Health—Their own Statements Follow.

Haliburton, P.E.I.—"I had a doctor examine me and he said I had falling of the womb, so I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have done me a lot of good. All the bearing-down pains have vanished. I have gained ten pounds in weight, the discharge is all gone, and I feel better than I have for a long time. I think any woman is foolish to suffer as I did for the sake of a few dollars.

"You can use my letter as a testimonial. It may encourage other poor women who suffer as I did to use your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. G. COLLICUTT, Haliburton, Lot 7, P.E.I.

Read What This Woman Says: New Moorefield, Ohio.—"I take great pleasure in thanking you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had bearing down pains, was dizzy and weak, had pains in lower back and could not be upon my feet long enough to get a meal. As long as I laid on my back I would feel better, but when I would get up those bearing down pains would come back, and the doctor said I had female trouble."—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was the only medicine that helped me and I have been growing stronger ever since I commenced to take it. I hope it will help other suffering women as it has me. You can use this letter."—Mrs. CASSIUS LLOYD, New Moorefield, Clark Co., Ohio.

This Home-made Cough Syrup Will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly, and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes 16 ounces—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir two minutes. Put 3/4 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16-ounce bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps and a cough. You probably know the medicinal value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in gualic acid and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pine Co., Toronto, Ont.

with a caressing gesture, she added softly, "Have you had any fresh trouble during my absence, dear?" Shirley started.

"No, no," she answered hurriedly. "What makes you think so?"

"Your face again," Madge said, smiling. "It's a very tell-tale one, and it was not so pale as this when I saw it last, and there were not those heavy marks under your eyes which were there now."

"You have been seeing such rosy cheeks during my absence," Mrs. Grant answered, forcing a little smile, "that it is no wonder you think mine pale. En revanche," she added, "I have never seen you looking so well and bright, dear."

Madge laughed, colored, and put up both hands to her face with a charming gesture of shyness and hesitation; then she slipped her gloves and through Shirley's arm, and they entered into the cottage together.

The fire was burning cheerily in the little sitting room, but the room did not look so pleasant and homelike as usual; it had a strange unfamiliar look to Madge Oliphant's eyes as she glanced round her. None of the books were out of their places. The piano was closed, the pile of music all in its order; there was no work on the table; no pretty picturesque litter anywhere.

"Won't you take off your coat?" Shirley said nervously. "You had better do so, or you will not feel the good of it when you go out again."

Madge acquiesced; and then Shirley talked loud and fast and nervously, and moved restlessly about the room in a purposeless kind of way which Madge could not help observing.
