Something to Avoid.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Two young people came to me last spring and told me they were thinking of taking a summer cottage with another couple, and asked my advice as to this step. I suppose you can guess what my advice was. Perhaps you, too, are surprised how much good it did. As it happened, however, they couldn't get the cottage and so the experiment was called off. Consequently they are as serene as ever that only this unfortunate mischance kept them from showing the world that they really could have had a successful summer. I can't help wishing that someday they will get a chance to try it.

They Spoil Their Best Friendship.

Of course they may prove me a bad prophetess. But if they do, they will certainly be the first people I ever knew to make a real success of that sort of experiment. And I have known many attempts. One of the most interesting cases I ever heard of, was related to me recently by a man who played the part of arbitrator. The two couples had been unusually good friends before they started (that is the worst of it, people will persist in taking their best friendships and spoiling them this way), and they were coquise.

One Hated Lamb, The Other Hated Beef.

The usual little differences both wanted to dress in the best when they came in from the day they had different ideas of the proper hour for breakfast time, one hated roast lamb and the other beef, etc.) developed in about a week and, having reached a crescendo of unendurability in six weeks, my friend was called in to mediate. They promised to do whatever he suggested and the next morning he announced his plan. They were to draw lots for the cottage for the remainder of the season and then whoever lost was to pack up and get out that day. They were furious at the idea but eventually stuck by their promise. For a year or so they didn't speak either to each other or to their arbitrator, but in the course of a time they have all become friends again.

Which is a much happier ending than such tales usually have.

Hard Enough For Members Of A Family To Get Along.

Everyone knows it is not easy for the members of a family, with their different tastes and desires, to get along in perfect harmony, and it is about ten times harder for two families—with all the well developed family habits on top of their individual differences.

I suppose there are cases when doubling up ought to be done, as for instance to save coal in this national emergency. For such cases may I make two suggestions. Let one couple run the house and the other board with them. And secondly do not take a couple with whom you are too intimate to begin with. Better someone whom you neither intensely like or dislike and to whom you are not bound by any previous closeness of intimacy.

THE CHANGE.

They'll bring us back the tender things they found on English lanes; They'll weave into the songs they sing some sweet, old, English strains.

Though England once seemed far away, and strange was Scotland's heather, We're one in hope and purpose now; our boys have marched together.

They'll catch a little of the mirth that lights the eyes of France. They'll learn from them the love of life, the splendor of romance. They've crossed the sea to live with them through every sort of weather.

And France and we shall comrades be! Our boys have marched together. Just as the little ones at home come romping from the street. To tell about the parents of the children that they meet.

So they will come and they will go when finished are their labors. And we shall love and they shall love, and all the lands be neighbors.

Milady's Boudoir

How can one get rid of disfiguring wrinkles satisfactorily? The remedy is so simple that few will believe in its efficacy and yet in many instances it is so difficult to apply that many women after a few trials will give up in despair. But it is the only real remedy and, what is more, anyone can apply it right in their own home. The secret is this: Think pleasant thoughts, drive out of your head all ideas of evil, jealousy, rage or discontent. Simple, isn't it, and yet very difficult, you will admit.

The face reflects every emotion more faithfully even than the mirror. What you are what kind of thoughts you entertain can be no secret to the world. All your ideas, whether for good or evil are written on your face for all to read who gaze upon you. Don't deceive yourself by supposing that you can dissemble, for you can't. As you think, so is your face moulded.

Have you ever noticed how, even an ugly face, one that has few redeeming features, is made lovely to look upon by a pleasant expression, by a mouth that tells a tale of kindness, by eyes that look gladly upon the world? The beauty who has a dissatisfied expression cannot equal in attractiveness the girl who has less physical attractions but more mental and spiritual beauty. These things are lasting, physical good looks are only temporary.

If you are afflicted with deep lines which spread from nose to mouth you may know they come from discouraged thoughts, from a tendency to look on the black side of life. Positively draws down the corners of the mouth, makes the cheek sag distantly and gives the whole face a disagreeable expression. Change your viewpoint, and note the difference in your face. In fact, cultivate optimism for six months or so and then you may laugh at wrinkles for you will find they have disappeared.

Mountain Guns.

Probably few people at home are aware even of the existence of British mountain artillery. This is hardly to be wondered at, for the real home of our mountain artillery is in India—away up in the fastnesses of the North West Frontier.

The first mountain gun in use was a ten-pounder. This, though used in action by a battery at Gallipoli, may now be regarded as obsolete. To-day we have two kinds of mountain guns—3.7 howitzer, firing a twenty-pound shell up to 6,000 yards; and a 2.75 field effective at 5,400 yards, and firing a shell of 12 pounds.

The feature of mountain artillery is its mobility. Transport is effected by means of pack-mules, the gun being dismantled, and each part loaded separately. This operation, in the hands of skilled gunners, may be performed in a very short space of time.

In each mountain battery there are four guns—one per sub-section—which, in a howitzer battery, consists of some fifty mules. In each sub-section there are four distinct mule-teams—gun, relief gun, baggage, and ammunition, the names of which explain their various functions. Eight mules are necessary to carry the 3.7 gun, and six to carry the 2.75. Each gun-pack saddle is designed to carry one part, while baggage and ammunition saddles conform to one standard.

Many weird tales can be told by mountain artillerymen of long days and weary nights spent in literally dragging worn-out mules over rock-strewn hills and tortuous "waddees" (or ravines) in search of the elusive Turk during that by now historical "stand," which, starting from behind Gaza, made Jerusalem ours. It may here be explained that when some still-contested point was being assaulted, it was often necessary for the attendant mountain battery to travel from peak to peak in the vicinity, in an endeavour to shell the enemy from all vantage points, such spots, owing to the nature of the country being inaccessible to the other branches of artillery.

And if anyone happens to meet a member of the Anzac Cavalry, ask him who was first there in support when that last mad dash was made which resulted in the capture of Jericho.

MILADY'S LINIMENT CURES DANDY.

STRENUOUS TIMES.

These be the times that try men's souls; we're always digging up our rolls, and stripping off the hills; as fast as we can earn the coin it has to go for steak and loin, for pantaloons and pills. "The price has risen," is the cry, whenever a fellow goes to buy a hymnbook or a hen; the year has made of trade a botch, and so the prices rise a notch and they will rise again. These be the times that try men's souls; the doughnuts now are mostly holes, the pies are thin and pale; most things are made of substitutes, and these are worm-holes in the fruits for which we blow our kale. A pound of butter costs us now as much as would have bought a cow, in balmy times of peace; and when we buy it some come with muffled drums, and says, "Conserve the grease." These be the times that try men's souls; we cannot touch, with ten-foot poles, the price of things we need; the stand off at the store is banned, and all the wealth we have on hand is merely chicken feed. And yet, as I pursue my way, I do not see a grouch all day, or hear a plaintive whine; the boys seem glad to stand the gaff, and all the hard luck makes them laugh, instead of bringing brine. You cannot whip a bunch like us; in times of peace we rant and cuss, and paw around like sin; but when we need to wear a yoke we view the blamed thing as a joke, and wear it with a grin.

PIRATE BOATS SURRENDER. LONDON, Nov. 20. Thirty miles off Harwick this morning at sunrise, twenty German pirate boats were sighted. Twenty additional U-boats will be surrendered on Thursday and twenty more on Friday. The remainder will be surrendered on Saturday to be fixed later.

METZ RECLAIMED.

METZ, Nov. 20. Marshal Petain entered Metz at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon amid the wildest enthusiasm. The Marshal Petain entered the city at 2 o'clock before the statue of the Marshal Ney and reviewed his troops. The Municipality and local societies formed the Marshal at the City Hall and the Vicar-General greeted him at the Cathedral. General Manu has issued a proclamation greeting the people of the city, saying: "The regime of oppression and vexation ended with the German defeat. Republican Army brings liberty and justice. France opens widely her arms to all her re-found children." In the afternoon the people of Metz carried out by the people of Metz. The statues of the German Kaiser and William I. had toppled over on his equestrian monument, while the statue of the Kaiser had been pulled down with a chain around his neck. Former Emperor.
