

Gower St. Silver Jubilee.CLOSING SERVICE.

By yesterday's express the Rev. Carl Garland returned to his church in Bangor, Maine, after a strenuous week of service in connection with the Silver Jubilee of Gower St. Church. It was peculiarly fitting that one who had been a scholar in Old Gower St. Sunday School, and a worker in the days of the Tabernacle on the Parade Ground, should have occupied the place of prominence in the Jubilee celebrations, and no better choice could have been made. Mr. Garland was born in Lower Island Cove but spent his youth and young manhood in the city. In the United States he has won for himself a position of usefulness and influence, has proved himself an untiring and successful worker and has won the regard and confidence of his people and his church. He came to St. John's not forgotten, as the invitation gave evidence, but almost unknown to the younger generation. His first audiences were composed mainly of strangers, his closing ones of personal friends. Mr. Garland has left influences and memories behind him that will not be forgotten by the Methodists of the city, when a new generation unites with the younger ones of the present in celebrating Gower Street's Golden Jubilee in 1946.

The Rev. Carl Garland is so thorough a Prohibitionist, that to say of him that he kept the best wine for the last might be inadvisable, but his closing words, delivered with such rare delicacy and feeling couched in graceful verbiage, and uttered with an eloquence seldom equaled, exceeded all previous utterances. It was long past the half hour when he left the rostrum to proceed to the station, carrying with him the gratitude, affection and prayers of one of the largest congregations that have assembled in recent years within the walls of Gower St. Church.

A brief address on the workings of Prohibition preceded his sermon. Of Prohibition in the United States he said emphatically, that whilst there were evasions, they were not in enforcement, and despite all that has been said or written by travellers and critics, the law "is as well enforced as any law on the Statute Book" of the Great Republic. Prohibition in this and other lands was faced with four dangers, (1) an ineffective law; (2) an ignorant people; (3) bribe-taking, and illegal gain by rascally officials, and (4) hog-tied Government. Too often laws were made with loop-holes through which astute lawyers could drive the figurative coach and four. The people were refused instruction. Prohibition might be advocated on religious and moral grounds, but to lose it, after once gained, would prove the greatest economic disaster that could befall any people. To derive revenue from the sale of intoxicants, was to draw the life blood from the opened veins of the body politic. It might stimulate for the time, but must enfeeble and eventually destroy. In all lands were found those who were ready to prostitute their offices for gain, and many a swollen fortune had been made during a brief tenure of office. Men such as these needed watching. The worst man in political life is a "good man hog-tied," the man who sacrifices principles to expediency, and rather than breast the current, is content to swim with the tide—the way of least resistance. To make Prohibition a success, he added, (1) Refuse to regard the business as a party political affair, divorce it from all methods of Government; (2) Inform the people; (3) Express your resentment when the law is not enforced, and express it clearly. A good many of our churches are made of putty in these days; (4) Stand together. The hope was that Mr. Garland might have been able to remain until Tuesday's express and address a mass meeting in the College Hall on Monday night. Circumstances, however, necessitated his return to Maine, and yesterday's brief address was the substitute.

At the close of the address the regular service was resumed, Mr. Garland taking for his text Revelations 22 vs. 4: "And they shall see His Face." There followed a discourse pulsating with feeling, and abounding in charm, in pathos and in zeal. Mr. Garland possesses that "infinite variety" which always surprises, and often rejoices. It was as though an Elijah had given place to the gentle seer of Patmos. To repeat what was said is beyond the writer's power, and will not be attempted, but the earnestness and forcefulness, the beauty of its diction and the magnetism of its eloquence will remain in the memory of every one whose privilege it was to listen. Sunday morning's closing address formed a worthy crown to a week of faithful and fearless service and gave the privilege to all who were present. The service was both grateful for the privilege it has enjoyed, and proud because Mr. Garland is a son, and a former citizen of Newfoundland.

HARVEST FESTIVAL.
A notable feature of yesterday's services was the Harvest Festival. Beneath the pulpit were massed the contributions of the congregation, potatoes and turnips, apples and other fruit, cabbage, parsnips, carrots, and sheaves from the grain fields. The various contributions were arranged with admirable skill and taste. In the morning the Rev. Mr. Forbes, pastor of the church, conducted the former part of the service, and preached at night, with much acceptance.—Daily News.

British P. O. Savings Bank.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13, 1921.—The British Post Office Bank, which has just completed its 60th year of business, now has 15,000 branches and in 1920 had an income due to its depositors of $256,000,000. Statistics of the Bank's progress received by the Bankers' Trust Company, of New York, from its English Information Service, disclose that the number of depositors has increased from 435 on the opening day in 1861 to 15,500,000 at present, with the addition of over 5,000,000 investors in Government securities obtained through the medium of the Bank. An interesting feature of the Bank's operations was an increase in balance on deposit during the war, a growth which has been continued. In 1915 the amount standing to the credit of depositors was £186,327,584. In 1917 the amount was £203,262,058. The volume of the Bank's transactions is illustrated by 128,412 deposits made in one day, February 27, 1915. The average deposit in that year was £2.68. 4d. The total cost of operation in 1917 was £701,409, equivalent to 1.2 percent of the amount of deposits during the year.

Kaiser Ignorant of Army Plans.VON MOLTKE THOUGHT HIM A BABBLED—VON KLUCK WARNED AGAINST SPEED.

Before the great German rush was made on Paris in 1914 every detail of it had been rehearsed three times at German army manoeuvres. Further, at each rehearsal the same mistake was made. Von Kluck, who was in command of the right wing, went forward too fast and received from General von Moltke, who was in command, the reprimand: "If you do that when the war begins we will lose." The prophecy was fulfilled.

These revelations are made in the memoirs of von Moltke, which are in the care of Rudolf Steiner, mystic and theosophist, who conducts a college of higher culture at Doronach, near Basle, in Switzerland. After General Moltke's death, Madame von Moltke gave the memoirs to Steiner to be published, but when they were ready for the press an order came from Berlin forbidding their publication. To Jules Sauerwein, of the Mainz Steiner has, however, communicated some of the introductory passages. These show that in the few years preceding the outbreak of the war the German military manoeuvres took the form of complete rehearsals of the march on Paris, only on a slightly smaller scale. Only the military staff and Chancellor Moltke confessed they knew anything about the intention to attack through Belgium. Not even the Kaiser or the German Minister of War knew the army's full intention, and when Steiner, during Moltke's life, expressed his astonishment to him that the Kaiser did not know, the former commander-in-chief of the German armies replied: "We could never have told him. He was far too much of a babbler and too indiscreet. He would have told all the world."

In a passage of his memoirs the General relates how right up to the last moment the Kaiser believed that England would not fight and would prevent France from doing so. The whole war, he believed, would be on the Eastern frontier and when he had been persuaded to sign the mobilization orders, he wanted them recalled and the troops halted an hour's march from the French and Belgian frontiers. Moltke refused to sign the counter-order and it was not till some hours later that the Kaiser, having received a new telegram from King George he could make no engagement of neutrality, consented to let the military party do as they liked.

When in the real war, von Kluck committed the same error he had made in the manoeuvres and got surrounded. Moltke knew that the war was lost and his health gave way. It was during the period of illness that he wrote his memoirs, of which the German Government still forbids publication.

"Brainy" Bits!

Elephants and whales are said to surpass human beings in the weight of their brains. But, compared with the weight of their whole body, there are not many animals which can beat man. In fact, it may surprise the reader to know that there are animals existing which rank ahead of humanity—taking, of course, the weight of the brain as against that of the whole body.

Many kinds of monkeys, certain members of the squirrel family, and a few of the mouse species, all being small animals, surpass man in brains—so we are told. Any animal, however, which is larger than a man, has no brain which is relatively as large as his.

It would appear that man's mental superiority is due rather to the quality and organization of his brain than to the size.

The usual weight of a man's brain is said to be 49½ ounces, as against a woman's 44 ounces.

A small head is no criterion as to the brains of a person; it depends upon the cerebral convolutions as to one's brain power. Indeed, it is said that large brains do not always denote great mental capacity.

Many celebrated men in the past have possessed brains weighing less than the average of 49½ ounces of mankind generally.

A brain weighing over 60 ounces—said to have been the heaviest known—was the possession of a man who never earned more than forty shillings a week during the whole of his lifetime! Another man who never earned a large sum was said to have a record brain for weight, so that size and weight are nothing to go by!

Fishes' Brain weigh a 3,588th part of the whole of their bodies.

Wonders of Radium.EXPERIMENTING WITH GUINEA PIGS.

An interesting discovery in connection with radium emanations, has lately been made by a young Geneva scientist, Dr. Anastas Kotsareff, which may to some extent in course of time replace the use of X-rays in obtaining photographs of the internal organs of the body. Dr. Wassmer, who has recently left the Swiss Radium Institute at Geneva, was the discoverer of a process by which the emanations of radium could be held in solution in liquid substances such as olive oil. Dr. Kotsareff, who was experimenting with guinea pigs in another connection, gave one of the animals a drink of a solution containing radium emanations, and, after anaesthetizing it, left a photographic dark slide containing a sensitive plate on its back. This was done in full daylight, the dark slide being left closed. On the plate being developed it was found to give a more or less outline of the animal's backbone. Since then the doctor had taken a number of other photographs by the same method. I have seen the plates and find that they resemble the

No News of Race.

Up to press hour no news had been received of the second Fishing Schr. Trophy Race, between the Lunenburg challenger Bluenose, Capt. Angus Walters, and the Gloucester defender Elsie, Capt. Marty Welch. People are all agog in the Maritime Provinces and the New England States over this race and Halifax is at present the Mecca of thousands of interested spectators and enthusiasts.

Early X-ray photographs, the outlines being clearly recognizable, but somewhat indistinct, (says the "Daily News" Geneva correspondent). A photograph of the throat, stomach, or intestines can be taken after the person has drunk the solution, the plate being merely placed above the part to be photographed during the progress of the solution through the body. For photographs of other parts of the body a local injection is necessary.
