There is usually a olume of these stories in or abo tory of the Opposition begins to go round in a circle the Minister turns to his story book with unconcealed pleasure. If the impetuous Davin calls down fire upon the bandits of the Government benches, if Mr. Foster de-nounces the sins of the Liberals in louder tones than usual, if Sir Charles Tupper himself pours out the vials of his wrath and there are cheers and counter-cheers, Sir Richard glances up from his book with the look of one who would say, 'Really, gentlemen, this is a most extraordinary noise.' Then he turns again to his tale, which perhaps has reached that point where the solitary British scout rides slowly through the fierce hillmen who watch his progress from the mountain side, and hop-ing by his air of indifference to escape from them. But if one imagines Sir Richard is not paying heed to what is passing in the House, let him make some slip in his figures, misrepresent he attitude of the Liberal party, or stort some incident in the parliamentary history of the country. In a mo-ment Sir Richard sends a shaft at the weak joint in the armor of his un-wary foe. All this without the least departure from his usual urbane and quaintly courteous style of address.
