bis late opponent, Dr. Valade. Two friends, both members of the club, made a bet of a champagne lunch on the late mayoralty election and the loser proposed as a good idea that both the successful and the defeated candidate should be invited to the lunch, which was done. The lunch was at the club and in the course of conversation it was suggested that they should allow themselves to be put up for membership. They consented, were duly nominated and an opposition was anticipated until a day to two ago, when it began to be whispered that some of the high-toned members objected to the two gentlemen proposed because they were both in trade," Mr. Erratt keeping a furniture store and Dr. Valade being interested in a chemist shop. The rule of the club is that if one-seventh of the ballots cast are adverse the candidate is excluded. The ballot was a joint one, and the box, it is understood, contained about 125 balls, of which nineteen were black, and both candidates were therefore defeated. There is very strong feeling in the club over the matter, it being claimed that the rejection is due to a small clique of civil servants who set up as "exclusives" and hold that no "tradesmen" should be admitted to the club. A large number of civil servants are members of the club, but in the present temper of those members who do not belong to the service it is extremely doubtful whether any more civil servants will be admitted.

It was impossible for the department to discover the inequalities of itself, and it would certainly be a good thing to have the three experts proposed by the Mayor employed to settle the question for quee and for all. As for printing the assessment roll he could not see what advantage would accrue from it, and he believed that it would not be worth the money spent in printing it.

New York, Jan. 23.—The London correspondent of The Tribune says: The American Minister has had his last official interview with Lord Salisbury at the Foreign Office. The British Foreign Minister now understands that the departure of Mr. Phelps from England at this moment is not due to the fact that a Republican President will be inauguraled next American Minister has had his last official interview with Lord Salisbury at the Foreign Office. The British Foreign Minister now understands that the departure of Mr. Phelps from England at this moment is not due to the fact that a Republican President will be inauguraled next March. Many Englishmen suppose Mr. Harrison is already installed in the White House. Lord Salisbury is better informed. He knows that Mr. Phelps would naturally have remained here another two months. The Foreign Office people know it, too, and they know that Mr. Phelps goes home because the British mission at Washington is vacant. This useful knowledge will gradually filter down into the general English mind. It will be understood here by the time Mr. Phelps steps on board the steamer at Southampton that the diplomatic affront offered the American Government by Lord Salisbury has been resented in the correct diplomatic way. Mr. Phelps' conduct throughout this difficult business has been, so far as an outsider has means of judging, energetic in more directions than one—he has shown firmness and courage. He appreciated the delicacy of the situation from the beginning of the Sackville incident, and he has never varied in his view of what ought to be done. Americans have to thank him for his unflinching insistence upon an American view. Americans in London sincerely regret his going.

In Edward Pierrepont's interesting account The North American Review of his interview with Lord Beaconsfield on the Irish question has been reprinted here. Some of Lord Beaconsfield's friends thought at first Mr. Pierrepont must have misunderstood what was said, but it has now been pointed out that these declarations, with all their home rule flavor, are in the same tone with what Mr. Disraeli said in the early part of his career. If he took different views of this question at different times he has had a still more illustrious imitator.
