upon confidence in high quarters than is generally apprehended. Another contribution to wards recovery has come through a quite unexpected improvement in the January earnings of the Western roads, and especially in those of the dranger lines, which was the last thing to have been expected.

The influences above noted as affecting the tone of the market favorably might have had little influence under other circumstances. But, coming now, they find a market prepared to yield a full response. Both here and in London, money is becoming so abundant and holders of balances are becoming so anxious to employ them, that the slightest symptom of improved conditions in investments must encourage buying. Moreover, it is to be kept in mind that the recent crisis has left behind no widespread depression or disorganization; its check to business has been but momentary and superficial, and the creation of national wealth is going on at its usual rate, whilst the launching of new corporate enterprises is at the lowest minimum. There must be therefore the usual legitimate demand for investment securities; and when bonds and stocks yielding 5 to 6 per cent. on their current market value can be had in large amounts, and money is exceptionally low and likely to remain so for the year 1801, it hardly seems to admit of a second opinion whether an active buying of stocks is not an element of the near future. The Bank of England was prepared to pay its £3,000,000 loan from the Bank of France when she reduced her rate to 3 per cent, and the question there of 1 per cent. for money in the open market, in the close prospect of such an important withdrawal from the bank, shows how extreme the ease in London must be. The uncertainty as to the final disposal of the free coinage movement is, at the moment, a serious drawback upon London buying our stocks; but in the event of the defeat of silver legislation London buying is likely to assume a volume that will surprise wall-street, and prove a great stimulus to prices of both stocks and bonds.

buying is likely to assume a volume that will sprise Wall-street, and prove a great stimulus prices of both stocks and bonds. Miscellaneods.

The New York Chamber of Commerce by a vote of 34 to 3 adopted a resolution deprecating free coinage of silver.
