Poetry.

One of our subscribers wishes us to insert the following: My Mother. Oh mother dear! I faint would ask Your presence once again, To press your hand upon my brow And charm away the pain.

Oh mother dear! I'm weary And time can never efface The memory of thy loving heart; Thy bright and smiling face.

Oh mother! mother! at thy name My very heart-string thrills While all I feel so lonely; And tears my eyes do fill.

The memory of my infant days Steal o'er my vision fast, I was the eldest born, the babe First to thy bosom clasped.

I was the first to lift my name Ere I could trembling stand; The first to know "a mother's love," Within our household band.

Within my heart thy name's enshrined In letters bright as gold, And when with grief mine eyes are dim Thy angel wings unfold.

And hover o'er thy loved ones left Turn here and there, my child Their joys and sorrows share.

And ever faithful to my charge, Pray God to love and bless For who more needs his constant care Than we the motherless!

A vision of fond memory comes It is thy cheer of death, When angels bore thee from our home And when thy dying breath—

Thy voice was heard to sing The Savior's dying love, And thus from earth thy spirit soared To reign with Him above.

And since such happiness is thine That thou from sin art freed, I'll only ask that my "proud Eternity with thee." L. S. P.

Select Literature.

My Great Aunt's Will. I am a clerk in a country store, and sometimes I wish I'd been a martyr in those days when they stretched people on beds of spikes or roasted them on a gridiron. Then I think I could have taken a little comfort in life.

This is the way of it: I am behind the counter on the side where we keep prints, and there trots up to the opposite side where we keep flannels a customer neither young nor beautiful; a heavy round and across, and she asks for calicoes; then I pull down half a dozen pieces, but she just gazes at the shelves and says she would like to look at the under piece of the top shelf; I climb up at the risk of breaking my neck and at the under piece out, and she concludes 'tisn't what she thought it was. Then she says she'd like to look 'at that stripe.' I blunder on to every other stripe before I get her a little strip for her. She says she likes the figure and she gets all the little figures out for her. She wants to know how much 'tis a yard; I say six cents, and she says she can get better in Springfield for five cents, and she looks at me suspiciously, as if I was a cheating youth. She wants to know if it will wash, and I say I presume so, most calicoes do wash. She looks at me indignantly, as if I was a saucy youth. Then she asks if we take eggs, and I say we do, and we pay twenty-eight cents, and she says they're paying calicoes at the other store; and off she goes, and I put up the prints, and am down at the farther end of the room turning fragments out of a cracker barrel, when she comes back and wants samples.

We keep the postoffice, and by the time I get back to my cracker barrel in comes a man who wants to know if he hasn't a letter. He never had a letter in his life, and he knows it, and I know it; but it is one of those facts that both parties ignore, and I go and look, and give him the contents, and he says that he hasn't any, and he departs in peace of mind.

Then there is a lady who wants to match a confounded bit of silk drab, drab bordering on the lilac. It takes me five minutes to find the box of silk drab, and five more to find we haven't drab bordering on the lilac. Then she wants sewing silk the same shade, and I hunt through all the sewing silk, and there's the sun sander on everything else under the head except lilac; but I know by the color, and I sell assurance that he hasn't any, and he departs in peace of mind.
