WHAT I WOULD BE.

I would not be a drone, sitting all the day, Living on what others bring, though as fit to work as they, Sitting sleepily at home, while the world is all alive, The only useless living thing in all the busy hive.

I would not be a wasp, skimming o'er the pleasant fields, Sucking poison from the blossom the sweetest fragance yields;

Drawing evil from the lovely, and bitter from the sweet, And armed with a ready sting for every one I meet.

But I would be a busy bee, getting honey from the flowers, And ever working busily through all the summer hours; So diligent in books or work that when I go to play, I may feel that I have earned it by toiling cheerfully.
