

MARITAL LAW.—The St. Louis correspondent of the American Review referring to the "Marital Law" in that city, says that it would be a charming further step to say "For years this city has not been so quiet and orderly as now." Perfect order to life and property exists by day and night, and this leads one to inquire whether all our cities that are not well administered, might not take a lesson from this. There is too much freedom in American cities generally, a perfect license to do as is right in one's own eyes? And this is what is called Democracy. Where on earth did that sort of liberty work well? In what land and age of civilized men was it ever seen as in ours? The ignorant, vicious minority always have the rule in such cases.

PARALLEL FEET OF ARMS.—The Prince Napoleon has been visiting the historical battle grounds of Fairfax and Manassas. Considering the slowness that the Prince has frequently displayed in leaving scenes of danger, he must have been profoundly moved on the spot; so much so, that we can imagine him being tempted to parody the well-known speech attributed to the Comte d'Artois, when he returned to France, and saying pathetically to the distinguished Yankee, collected round him, "Mes amis, il n'y a rien de changé ici. Vous n'avez parmi vous qu'un Américain de plus." If Plon-Plon had only been at Bull's Run, we will warrant he would have been the very first to distinguish himself—we mean in the same direction that others distinguished themselves.

Nothing so much disgusted Captain Lemuel Gulliver as his being claimed as a fellow by the Yahoos. The English Establishment feels much the same when the Irish branch of the United Church claims equality with it. The gentlemen to whom Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to give Ecclesiastical jurisdiction subordinate to her own in Ireland, and who are pleased to call themselves Bishops of the ancient Irish sees, have taken fright because the English Convocation has been allowed by her to alter a canon of 1603 about Godfathers and Godmothers. They address Her Majesty "praying that all matters involving any alteration in the doctrine, discipline, worship, and government of the Church may be referred to a general synod of the United Church of England and Ireland." At this the English Establishment is wroth, and its weekly organ, the Guardian, while declaring "our respect for the Episcopal office may plead an excuse for declining to criticise the document from a merely literary point of view," does "not feel disposed to wish the Bishops success in the suit with which they approach the Throne." It pleads that there is less resemblance between "the two sides of the Irish Channel than the two shores of the German Ocean." This is most true; Ireland is Catholic and England Protestant. But however little Ireland may resemble England, there is a mighty resemblance between the Irish and English Establishments. Both are creations of Royal authority; both possess of enormous endowments given by the piety of Catholics of old to the Catholic Church. Both are subject in all matters of doctrine and discipline to the sway of Parliament. Both usurp the names of the ancient titles and dignities of the Catholic hierarchy, and (what is most directly in point) both have been absolutely united, "for ever" by the same authority which called each of them into existence. Under these circumstances the "Irish branch" may justly demand not to have any legislation on which it is not consulted. In fact, this intimate union suggests, what people so often look for in vain, a real object and purpose for the Irish Establishment.—Who can say that its existence was not allowed, in the benign design of Providence, in order that it might be indissolubly tied to that of England; and might thus drag the other down with it to destruction; as in our ancient laws a murderer was tied to the dead body of the murdered man, and buried with him. This would be a real use for the Irish Establishment, and the first we ever heard of, if it is to be the means of ridding the earth of another nuisance naturally of a more robust constitution the Establishment of England. On one point the Guardian may set itself perfectly at rest. It says—"One of the greatest obstacles to the success and popularity of the Establishment amongst the Irish people is that the bulk of them persist in regarding it as an alien and intrusive institution. These prejudices are much weakened, and will, we doubt not, gradually vanish altogether. It would give to them a new lease of life if the prayer of the Irish Bishops should be granted by the Crown." Now, there is, happily, no tendency whatever in any portion of the Irish people to forget that the Protestant Establishment is a mark and brand of alien invasion. In fact, this is, as far as Ireland is concerned, the best thing to be said of the Establishment. We are, of course, against it, because it is false, heretical, unjust, and mischievous; because it sets race against race, and class against class; because it makes domestic peace impossible, and lessens the value of property; above all because it is a standing insult and brand upon the people of Ireland. But merely as Catholics, and speaking only of its strictly religious effects, we have always held them to be, on the whole, good—i. e., it impresses upon every child in Ireland the great truth that Protestantism, besides being false, is also anti-Irish—that it is an alien religion forced upon the Irish nation by foreign invaders, and that the Irishman who allows any worldly temptation to allure him to profess it is false to his country, as well as to his own soul and his God. The Guardian may assure itself that there is no need whatever of the existence of any synod of the "United Church of England and Ireland" in order to impress this important truth on the people of Ireland.—Weekly Register.
