

NEURALGIA.

There is no one whose life seems less worth living than the victim of Neuralgia. Exposure to cold, lowered vitality, or even slight excitement often is sufficient to precipitate an attack.

The pain is of the most lancinating and persistent character, and while it lasts there is no thought of food or sleep. Thus the person rapidly loses strength and looks careworn and haggard.

There have been hundreds of remedies suggested for this disease, but many, if not all, have failed to do more than give temporary relief.

MILBURN'S RHEUMATIC PILLS not only give relief, but they do more. They act on the disordered nervous system, promoting its nutrition, and causing a healthy action of the nerve trunks and filaments; they build up the health, remove all morbid elements from the blood, —that irritate the nerves and cause pain, and thus, getting at the source of the disease, they eradicate it completely from the system.
