

any English-speaking competitor. They will, in short, be the most active factor in the growing estrangement between the two races.

The English minority in Quebec, the Montreal group especially, thanks to their wealth, their business ability and their spirit of enterprise, can and do play, in the affairs of the nation, a part far more important than their proportionate number. It is up to them to play that part for the good or for the curse of this country.

No one wishes more ardently than myself that they should do it in the right way.

Henri BOURASSA.
