III. Layers on Practical Education.

1. GEOGRAPHY : HOW SHOULD IT BE TAUGHT.

Not. we reply, wholly from books; nor should books be ignored. But preliminary to the study of Geography, as much as comes within the pupil's observation of the topography of the earth should be taught. For example, we are in a country village, and occupied five hours a day with a class of little children; one has come, this pleasant morning down Summer's Hall; another has crossed the causeway by White's Mill; a third has gathered dandelion blossoms from the bank between the road and the Lake near the village, and so on.

The time arrives which we devote to a familiar talk with the pupils upon common things,—things which they may have seen; perhaps our subject is the hill they have come down; the attention is directed to other hills, the imagination to mountains, whose tops can only be reached by a ride of a long half day; and to some that are even higher than this, whose heads are away above the clouds; to mountains that have openings at their tops, where fire and smoke are continually sent forth; we show them a picture of such a mountain, or draw it upon the board, and give its general name.

At a subsequent lesson, the school-yard is our topic; assisted by the children, represent the yard upon the board, with the road, and the adjoining common, or whatever else we see. We talk at another time of the lake, of its beautiful lilies, of the

We talk at another time of the lake, of its beautiful lilies, of the fish, of the boats, or of whatever of interest suggests itself, of the islands, the sandy beach, the headlands, the little bays. The lake is just a mile long, and half a mile wide; we impress these distances with others upon the mind, and fix the idea of direction. We talk also of the little brooks that run down the neighboring hills and crook about through the long, smooth, and narrow valleys that slope gradually down to its sides—of the scources whence they spring, of their swollen condition after the heavy rains. We trace the outlet of the lake to the great ocean into which its waters empty. Some of the pupils have seen the ocean ; we let them give their own ideas of its appearance,—let them tell of the ships, of the beach, of the birds of the fish ; we try to enlarge their ideas of its vastness , we talk with them of the monster whale, of the sea turtle, the walrus, of the mountains and fields of ice.

After these, come many more things to be considered; animals of every kind, birds and creeping things; plants, trees and fruits; heat and cold, winter and summer; water and ice; clouds and vapour, snow and rain; rocks and soils, and some of the thousand relations and uses of all these.

And then, at what age we cannot say, will come the study of Geography;—for all this is not Geography any more than a familiar conversation upon the various parts of a house, the windows, the doors, the sills, etc., is architecture.

Some careful teachers, after teaching thoroughly the geography of the village, the town, or the city, advance to the neighboring town, thence to the county, thence to the state, and so on ;—enlarging their range till the earth is at last embraced. To this plan we decidedly object. The child can no more have an adequate idea of a country or a state than of the whole earth, unless the section comes within the power of his observation,—if he depends upon the representation, he may as well have a representation of the whole as of a part.

whole as of a part. The systematic study of Geography should be begun with the globe. If you have not, any globular body may be shown to the pupils, an apple, an orange, or a ball of wood. Its properties
