

and a model to other countries. This desirable end is now within our grasp, if our government and companies will but thrust aside the malign influence of the New York example, and co-operate heartily and sympathetically with a single eye to the good of Canada and her people—the strengthening of her companies, the benefitting of their policyholders and the extension of the blessings of life assurance among the, at present, unassured public.