capital, the stoning of de Girancourt the assasination of Charbonnier in Fez and instead of a Ujda or Lalla Marnia being occupied, a whole corps d'armee will be thrown into Morocco; a move rendered necessary by the upheaval of fanatical natives and a massacre of all the resident Christian traders and consuls, such as one looks for from day to day.

For the French in particular are hat ed from Tangier to the Atlas, as "Nazarenes" who have strangled Morocco's Moslem neighbors. "Wa wold-el-Harem" ("sons of the illegitimate") the Moors call the French since the forcible ocupation of the Regency of Tunis-an event that stirred profoundly Morocco's high-spirited population.

Yet nothing seems to stay the march of French diplomacy in this matter; and it aims at a stupendous scheme of empire which is but dimly realized even in Europe. France is working her way southward thru the rich date ountry of Tafilat until she reaches the Atlantic at Cape Bojador, Then she will have her prey completely envelop-

The Coming French Empire in Africa True, having gained Morocco, the con-queror can go no farther westward; but what about eastward and southward? As mistress of Morocco she will be at liberty to consolidate her vast African empire, and go down 1600 miles to Timbuctu and Lake Tchad, and then north again to the great emporium city of Ghadames, in the hinterland of Tri-

Add to all this Senegambia, and France will then have some 30,000,000 warlike people under her sway. These, stiffened with a French backbone, will surely produce 500,000 skilled fighting men, equal at least to the Algerian Spahis or the Senegalese sharpshooters whom France now rates so highly. Where will Great Britain's tenure of Egypt be then, or how shall she hold her ancient colonies on the west coast? To this mighty scheme Morocco is the key; and once let France get it in her possession, and she will surely close all doors from Tunis to Senegambia, 8 coastal range of 3200 miles. She will then have a monopoly of trade totaling between $400,000,000 and $450,000,000, and an empire exceeding that of Hindostan whose very name has for thousands o years been a synonym for riches. And this new empire will lie at France's own door, delightfully salubrious in cli-mate and with barely 30,000,000 of a native population to keep in order. A few far-sighted statesmen in Germany and England to-day foresecticarly this vast French empire, fairly onsolidated under the tricolor, in, say, the middle of this century. It will embrace Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco, Sene-gambia, the French Soudan, French Guinea, and the French Congo: the whole with a trade exceeding $600,-
