Camworth Swine Said to Head List

Of late during the prosperous times among swine breeders much interest has been developed in breeds which were formerly but little known in the state, says The Kansas Farmer, and other breeds which are the possessors of such qualities as recommend them for profitable stock for the farmer have been introduced and have found more or less favor. more or less favor. Among the breeds which are less commonly known may be mentioned the Tamworths. It has been maintained for many years that he market in the south and west made no demand for a bacon hog, yet the success with which the Tamworth has been introduced indicates that there may be a good field for this typical bacon breed. Professor Shaw is a great advocate of the bacon hog for Minnesota and other rectamble. dinnesota and other northern sections of our country, and it has been conceded that the Tamworth, with its wonderful reproductive powers and its ideal bacon type, has met the demands of that market more successfully than

The Tamworths are an English breed which has been bred with the utmost care for more than sixty years, and without any infusion of foreign blood. The result of this is a great uniformity as to color and type. This color is cherry red or dark because

We are convinced that the Tamworth has very many valuable qualities which recommend it to hog raisers, but we desire to repeat that the type is entirely different from the hogs which we have been accustomed to here, and this fact may be an index to the real value of the Tamworth.

When these great buildings are completed they will form about threetenths of the whole university. For the remaining seven-tenths we wait for the completion of the million.

The department dealing with the teaching of what is called pedagogy has been greatly enlarged to meet the new demands upon it, and again in this connection I may mention a new experiment, since I believe we have been the first to establish a faculty and a degree first to establish a faculty and a degree.

It is an old complaint often made by ing in commercial pursuits.

That ought not to be so. I can conceive no reason why a man, whose life is to be passed in commerce, should not derive as much advantage from a uni-

I think this review, incomplete as it is, will show that we have not been idle during the last five rears.

We have undoubtedly given a stimulus to the higher education thruout the United Kingdom. Following our example we find the sister colleges of Liverpool and Manchester, and also of Leeds, are developing themselves on the technical side, and are applying, I hope with every prospect of success, for independent charters as separate universities, and lastly even the metropolis is

They are very kind in disposition, wonderfully prolific and are extra good feeders. They have very deep bodies, splendid, arched back and remarkably good feed and legs. Their backs are not broad like the lard heg, and their hams would seem very deficient to a breeder not accustomed to the bacon type.
