ECONOMY

For the same amount of light the Nernst lamp requires only one-half the current taken by ordinary incandescent lamps. This means the running cost of electric lights has been reduced about 50 per cent by the introduction of the Nernst lamp.

London Conservatory of Music Examinations.

Mr. Victor Benham, one of the greatest of European pianists and lecturers, who succeeded Mr. Alberto Jonas at the Michigan Conservatory of Music, will examine the senior pupils at the London Conservatory of Music next Wednesday, after which he leaves for Europe to examine for the Manchester Guild Hall and the Paris Conservatory of Music, France. To examine for the Paris Conservatory is a very great honor, so in having Mr. Benham is shown the standing of the London Conservatory of Music, reaching The pupils of any teacher outside of the conservatory are privileged to try any of the examinations. At the examinations each pupil is known by number only, and if a pupil informs the examiner of his or her teacher's name, the examination is null, this making it as fair for one pupil as another. Next year the conservatory expects to have a great artist, possibly Rudolph Ganz, who played here with the Thomas Orchestra, or Madame Reve-King, both of whom have signified their pleasure to come. It is expected to have also a celebrated vocal teacher as examiner for this department. It is a great satisfaction to pupils to know that their diplomas are signed by such great artists, as a personal guarantee of their excellence.
