HOW MANY PEOPLE READ CLASSIFIED ADS?

One-fifth of Syracuse, N. Y., newspaper reader peruse the classified advertising section, according to merchants who have been quietly investigating the "pop advertisement" as a medium to attract patronage. The net result is the growth in the want advertisements carried in the local press. The stunt was given a tryout in the holiday shopping season, and a careful check of the results showed that it was a gold mine for the advertisers.

Many of the smaller department store managers, who hitherto have considered it beneath their dignity to patronage the classified sections of the papers, have found this a new channel for their efforts to move stock. Frequently a number of small advertisements in these sections, under various headings, with excellent results. Those merchants who believe strongly in the classified section of a newspaper, declare that a good portion of a newspaper's clientele turns to this section first.
