Both the workers and the industrialists on the German side are tired of the struggle, the correspondents say, the former seeing no hope of winning while at the same time their sufferings are augmented daily. The industrialists, with the exception of one or two of the most influential, are feeling increasingly the pinch of lost trade and are fearing for the future.

The French are reported as suffering scarcely less. They have not got what they went into the Ruhr to obtain, and French industries are being seriously affected by the curtailment of the coal supply.

The suggestion in these dispatches is that it will be impossible for present conditions to continue much longer.

BOTH TIRING OF RUHR STRUGGLE

Correspondents Assert That There is a Tendency Towards Peace; Strain is Great.

London, March 10—Although offering no very definite evidence to support the statement, some of the British correspondents in the Ruhr assert that there is a tendency towards peace and that both sides would be glad to see the end of the strain of the last few weeks.

The industrialists, with the exception of one or two of the most influential, are feeling increasingly the pinch of lost trade and are fearing for the future.
