Does not this speak volumes for the climate of the Okanagan, and also cast reproach on those who pay attention to seedling fruit instead of grafting the trees, and thereby turning into the market a superior article at least six weeks or two months earlier. The seedling fruit at present in the market generally ranges from 3 to 10 cents per pound, while the cultivated varieties would readily fetch from 10 to 25 'cents per pound and would require no more attention to raise and place on the market. How long will it take the horticulturist to recognize his true interest in this directon?
