The Quality of Ivory.

"Does ivory differ much in quality?" I asked a man who works in one of the stores where the ivory from all parts of the world lies.

"Ivy from Mombasa and Siam is the best. But we seldom get whole tusks from Siam; the natives keep the middle parts for themselves to decorate their temples. They send us home the ends. The hollow end, which is the largest, is of course, the least valuable, an only sells for 8 shillings the pound. It is used for piano keys, combs and the backs of brushes.

"What then, is the difference between ivory from Egypt and ivory from Mombasa and Siam?"

"Egyptian ivory is more brittle, less flexible. It is used chiefly for cutlery if you were to take a comb, for example, made of the best ivory from Mombasa or Siam, you could bend it almost double without breaking it.

"The ivory of the sea-cow or walrus," he said, "is very hard, and not so brittle. This here," pointing to a large, spiny rod of ivory about seven feet long, "is the horn of the sea unicorn, or narwhal."

"And to what use is it put?"

"It can't be used for anything except handles and nibs," he said. "It's as hard as nails and as brittle as glass."

Not a Half-Way Girl. He was in love with the girl and wanted to marry her, but he was cautious and didn't believe in the policy of getting all his fortunes to the touch, in other words, he was talking to her.

"Why?" she inquired with a rippling little laugh.

"Because it would help me in my business,"

"Oh," she exclaimed. "That's all right," he hastened to assure her. "I mean business."

"Indeed I do."

"To marry you if I can."

"Well," she said, "counting the distance between them, I'd like to see you go up and look him square in the face with a flash in her eye."

"Well," she said half indignantly, "what do you expect me to do to help you?"

"I don't want you to encourage me only to turn me down," he said, looking a bit. "In other words, I want you to meet me half way."

"I'd like to know just what you think of me," he said tentatively.

"The Turkish Ministry of Public Works has determined upon the reconstruction of the ancient water conduits of Jerusalem, dating from the age of Solomon. By this means it would be possible to convey 2500 cubic meters of water daily to the Holy City.

The new conduits are to be joined to the ancient aqueducts of Ansh, and are to be carried through a tunnel 3750 meters in length. The total outlay in connection with these works is estimated at 2,000,000 francs.

At a Cremation. Mrs. Alice N. Lincoln then described her feelings while watching a cremation:

"As we stood in silence, watching the waxy glow which played over the white surface of the most a feeling came to us of awe, certainly, but also of peace and rest. There was something so spiritual, so elevating in the absolute purity of the intense heat that it seemed to all of us who stood there far less appalling than the blackness of an open grave."

THE SKULL OF KING ROBERT.

of Legends the Liberator—His melancholy Death by Leprosy—Story of the Heart of the Hero of Bannockburn.

After 465 years Edinburgh has, says the Chicago British American, been enjoying the peculiar sensation of gazing on the skull of King Robert the Bruce. The relic, it is true, is not the actual cranium of the hero of Bannockburn, but merely a cast from the original, which was entrusted to the forerunner undisturbed in the Abbey of Dunfermline. For it was there that in the year 1329 the King was laid beside his second wife, Elizabeth de Burgh, daughter of the Earl of Ulster and mother of David II. Even the name of Robert was brought in Dunfermline, then a favorite residence of the Scottish sovereigns admits of no doubt. But the tomb which he had planned to occupy in the Abbey of Dunfermline, and in fact, was the church which followed the iconoclasm of the Reformation. But in 1819, in clearing the foundations for a third church on the same spot, the King's bones were discovered and duly reinterred with the reverence due to a monarch who, whatever may have been his faults as a man, must ever live in the national memory as one of the greatest of heroes.

At the time some interest was naturally taken in the discovery, and it would seem that the celebrated Dr. Gregory, Professor of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, who bears a particular reputation, there is one great important fact, too slightly treated by many housekeepers, that is, perfect iron folding means crooked, unsteady hanging to the drapery and sagging or "ake" to the very best part of the room's decoration. For as not window pictures? Are they not the eyes of a room, and therefore in need of careful treatment? The poorest stuff requires quite as much, if not more, care in hanging than the finest. A little out of plumb means any amount of trouble. An uneven folding means crooked, unsteady hanging to the drapery and sagging or "ake" to the very best part of the room's decoration. For as not window pictures? Are they not the eyes of a room, and therefore in need of careful treatment? The poorest stuff requires quite as much, if not more, care in hanging than the finest. A little out of plumb means any amount of trouble. An uneven folding means crooked, unsteady hanging to the drapery and sagging or "ake" to the very best part of the room's decoration.

As might have been anticipated from the character of Bruce, the cranium is said to be of a large brain capacity, and to exhibit that massive lower jaw, which is understood to denote the firmness of the will.

Every measurement should be perfectly true and when once put in place no pains should be spared to keep the folds hanging as they were meant to hang. A portiere which is wished to have the appearance of real service, by children or elders either, soon becomes a bluish rather than a decoration in a room, unless it has been firmly hung and is frequently arranged.

Watches That Talk. Watches that will tell you in so many words what o'clock it is, and clocks that will tell you it is time to get up, are among the latest results of the application of the phonograph.

Ordinary repeating watches are furnished with a driving wheel, which admits of the attachment of a small movement operating the hammer that strikes the sounding bell. This admits of striking the hours, the quarters and even the minutes, if desired. This striking, essentially monotonous, calls for a great deal of attention on the part of the owner of the watch, who is forced to count the strikes and to distinguish the intervals between hours and quarters, between quarters and minutes. Nivart's watch is free from all these inconveniences; the sounding bells are replaced by a circular plate of vulcanized rubber, with striated furrows, and the hammer by a point resting upon the furrows. The mode of operation will be readily comprehended.

Two Dismal Anecdotes. Two excellent stories of Disraeli told by Lord Dufferin are not to be found in the copious papers to Lady Dufferin's poems. "One of my earliest recollections with Mr. Disraeli," writes his Lordship, "was in Brook Street the morning of the day he had won his Buckingham election. I stopped to congratulate him on his successful campaign, when he said to me, 'Yes, I said rather a good thing on the hustings yesterday. There was a fellow in the crowd who kept calling me a man of straw, without any stake in the country, and asking what I stood upon, so I said, 'Well, it is true I do not own the broad acres of Lord So-and-So or the vast estates of the Duke of A., but if the gentleman wants to know upon what I stand I will tell him—I stand on my head.'"

"Many years after I passed him again as he was strolling up London from the House of Commons to speak to some colleagues in the House of Lords. Happening to inquire whether he had read a certain novel, he said, 'Oh, I have no time for novel-reading now. Moreover, when I want to read a novel I write it.'"

A Terrible Dream.

Mrs. Blank went shopping. Mr. Blank went with her. No one can explain just why he went, for she didn't positively compel it, and he is still regarded as sane! He went, anyhow.

"What's the matter?" she demanded. "I—I had a dreadful dream," he gasped. "I thought we were both dead, that you had gone to heaven and that I—I hadn't!"

"How perfectly awful," he cried, grasping him convulsively around the neck, "to be separated, and—"

"We—we weren't separated," moaned Blank, with a shudder. "I—I could have endured that! But no—I dreamt you were to be allowed to go shopping forever, and that I was condemned to go with you!"

Art in Drapery. The question of how to drape curtains is an important one. One artist said: "Everything should hang straight at the sides. Another favorite ends, and, or, in technical parlance, 'ways and tails,' and a third favored 'draped lambskins.'"

However the artistic eye may design a particular drapery, there is one great important fact, too slightly treated by many housekeepers, that is, perfect iron folding means crooked, unsteady hanging to the drapery and sagging or "ake" to the very best part of the room's decoration. For as not window pictures? Are they not the eyes of a room, and therefore in need of careful treatment? The poorest stuff requires quite as much, if not more, care in hanging than the finest.
