Editor's Talk

THIS week's cover is a reminder that Dominion Day is at hand and that "The Maple Leaf" is still Canada's Emblem. In spite of many attempts to lessen the popularity of this distinctive Canadian symbol, it bids fair to retain its place in the public mind. Mr. Jeffery has indicated these ideas in a subtle and quite unusual sort of drawing.

THE short story in this week's issue is by a Canadian, resident in Philadelphia, who has already contributed several tales to our fiction department. We hope our readers will appreciate this tale, because Mr. Bond knows the life of the detective by actual experience. Fiction based on experience is the best fiction. We hope to have more of this promising writer's work during the year.

NEXT week's issue, though it will not be a special number, will be a large paper and will contain some rather striking features. The Quinquennial Congress and other important events will be treated pictorially, and there will be several important articles.
