VOLUNTEERS NEEDED. Men Against Sexual Aggression is a new program organized by Counselling Services and is aimed at preventing sexual aggression among students of UNB-F and STU. The project involves male students from both universities in educating other men about sexual aggression. Student volunteers receive three days of training as peer educators to provide 1-2 hour educational programs for other men on campus. The aim of the project is to help men examine their attitudes and values about women in the context of romantic relationships. Any male student interested in volunteering as a peer educator can pick up an application form and project description at Counselling Services, Room 19, Alumni Memorial Building. Application deadline is April 19. Call 453-4820 for more information.

UNB AND STU OFFER WORKSHOP FOR ADULTS CONSIDERING UNIVERSITY STUDY. Charting a new course in life can be intimidating, but for adults thinking of attending university, navigational assistance is available. Transition to Learning, an annual workshop for adults interested in continuing their education, takes place in Fredericton on Saturday, May 4.

Sponsored by the University of New Brunswick and St. Thomas University, the workshop will run from 8:30 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. at the Wu Conference Center on the UNB campus.

"Many people are finding themselves in times of transition or reassessment, perhaps due to employment changes, divorce, children leaving home or any number of other factors," says Judith Potter, program director for part-time degree studies and adult learner services with UNB's department of extension and summer session.

"Education is one of the means that people use to recreate their lives. We would like to invite people who are in that frame of mind to join us and check out the opportunities at UNB and STU."

Ms Potter points out that adults have many other commitments which make it difficult for them to go to several different offices on two different campuses in search of information about learning opportunities, finances, application and registration procedures, and specific courses and programs. "Transition to Learning provides a one-stop-shopping approach to getting their questions answered."

Admission to the workshop is free; however, pre-registration is required by April 26. Registration forms can be obtained from UNB's department of extension and summer session by telephone at 453-4646 or by fax at 453-3572.

Workshop participants will receive practical tips and advice from information sessions and small group discussions on a range of topics, including study skills, financial aid, career counseling, and an introduction to the UNB library system. Lunch is provided along with the opportunity to meet and talk with other participants, workshop resource people and adults who have already made the transition to university study.

"Feedback from past participants indicates that they think the workshop extremely worthwhile in helping to lower their anxiety levels and that it puts them in touch with their peers and the information and services they require," says Ms Potter. "They particularly appreciate the input of current mature students who can relate to their concerns."

Ms Potter notes that about 40 per cent of those attending UNB and a similar percentage at STU are mature students. "With growing attention in our society to multiple career transitions within our working lifetime, it is increasingly important that adults are aware of what UNB and STU have to offer."
