

At the outbreak of War, after consultation with the British Government, the Prime Minister announced that Canada's greatest field for assistance in the War Effort would be in the way of industrial production and in training personnel for the Air Force.

The reason for this is obvious -- Canada's industries are relatively free from the menace of bomb attack.