

in extent, situated west of Bon Accord Square; Ellendale Park, named in honor of the illustrious wife of the founder, Col. A. D. Davidson, Invergarry, and others.

Beyond this the wonderful blue of the Fraser sweeps, where just above the city it is divided by Douglas Island into the Pitt and Fraser River respectively. On the opposite shore the Gold Hills, the Coquitlam Valley with its miniature Pyramid, and Sheepshead Mountain directly opposite Bon Accord Square, rises up in its purple shroud like some huge monster rearing its mighty form to protect the Hospital for Nervous Diseases, which lies snugly at its base a short distance from the Industrial Sanitarium and Farm.

Snow-capped mountains, rolling hills, valleys, rivers and lakes vie with one another in forming a glorious outlook, a panoramic view impossible for a pen to picture. Here on the bank of the Fraser a great city will be built, whose industries, mighty as they may and will be, must fall into insignificance beside the wonderful beauty of the scene stretching out untrammelled and far away into the purple distance.
