"No doubt of it."

"How do you know?"

"The usual way—by seeing and drinking it at the tables of men who know what they are about."

"Well, I have never been out of the United States, and yet I have learned about wine in just the same way. I commenced in New Orleans among the old Spanish and French crecoles, and have kept it up since, here and there. I can see in five minutes whether a man knows anything about his wine. If he does, I remember every word he says—that is my strong point—head and tongue. I can't remember sermons and speeches, but I can remember very syllable that Sam Ward said one night at your grandfather's ten years ago, and if I have one tasted a good wine, I never forget its fashion of taking hold."

This is an expurgated edition of what he said; his profanity kent her a grapher.

thing will be the closing of the mills, and putting anywhere from three thousand to ten thousand men on the streets. Then, if the strike gains the rairroad men, we shall be embargoed,—boiling, and safety-valve riveted down." Farnham had no thought of his imperilled interests. He began instantly to conjecture what possibility of danger there might be of a disturbance of public tranquility, and to wish that the Beldings were out of town.
