

Try BEAVER FLOUR Both Ways

Make up a batch of Bread and Rolls with it. Then bake a Pie and Cake.

Notice the fine, even texture—the absence of holes—the delicate, nutlike flavor, of the Bread. Then consider the lightness and flakiness of the Pastry. You'll never go back to the coarse, almost tasteless western wheat flours, after once enjoying the flavor of the good things made with Beaver Flour. Order a sack today.

The first instalment of "The Bear of Silver Dale" by George Gilbert, the well-known outdoor writer, appears in Red and Gun for June. This is a thrilling story of adventure along the trap line. Anyone interested in the Timagami Forest Reserve would do well to read the splendid article entitled "A Seven Day Canoe Trip" which tells of the doings of eight red blooded young men in the north country. Robert Page Lincoln, the author of Fishing Notes Department is the writer of an interesting and instructive article on summer camping. In addition to several other stories and articles the regular departments are included in this splendid number of Canada's premier sportsmen's magazine which is now on sale. Red and Gun is published by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont.

SMUTZ AS AMBASSADOR

London, May 31.—(Reuters)—Reuters learns that General Smutz has not yet been approached on the subject of the British Ambassadorship to the United States as reported from Washington, but in any event he would not accept as he is desirous of returning to South Africa.

Settlement In Winnipeg Likely

WINNIPEG, May 31.—With arbitration conferences actually under way on the basic industrial dispute of the general strike—the walkout of the metal trades—and hundreds of employees returning to work, gradual settlement of the civic and industrial tie-up was beginning today.

Edmonton dispatches indicated resumption of public service functions is now complete there. Although strike headquarters asserted workers in thirty-two trades were still out.

Votes on a general strike now being taken at Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia, will be completed and announced within a few days.

Though the first outward demonstration of disaffection occurred in Winnipeg yesterday in a parade of veterans and strikers to the Parliament Buildings, no disorders occurred. The veterans promised to return again today to insist on speedy action to legalize collective bargaining, one of the chief points sought by the metal trades in their walkout, which precipitated the general strike.

When members of the railway brotherhoods succeeded in beginning the first arbitration conference, efforts to replace striking workers generally slackened, except in the police, fire and postal services. Officials of the brotherhoods warned maintenance of way employees in Winnipeg, and the West not to consider sympathetic strike votes or attempt to walk out in violation of their contracts.

Serious Fire At Fredericton

Fredericton, May 30.—Fredericton suffered a serious fire this afternoon and for a time the whole portion of the eastern end of the city was threatened.

The fire started in a double tenement house on Court House Square owned by Fred B. Edgcombe and occupied by Corporal Lavoie, a returned soldier, and Joseph Murdoch. Children playing with matches is believed to have been responsible for the start of the fire. The flames spread with amazing rapidity, causing tremendous volumes of dense smoke.

The building, where the fire originated, is on the bank of the St. John river, and the flames were fanned by a heavy wind from the river which carried sparks and burning embers to the buildings in the path of the wind for several blocks, causing as many as a dozen other buildings to be on fire simultaneously. Each blaze, as it originated, was fought, either with the apparatus of the fire department or with buckets of water and garden hose, until eventually another alarm was sent in from box No. 28 for a fire at the residence of Judge Crockett, on George street, about a third of a mile away, whence the sparks had been carried in sufficient quantities to cause a blaze on the roof. Part of the fire department were dispatched to fight that fire, and with the assistance of a large number of volunteer fire fighters, succeeded in stopping any spread there, although damage estimated at about $1,000 was done to Judge Crockett's home. Much of the damage there, however, resulted from water. In the meanwhile, the firemen succeeded in getting the main blaze under control, but not until the house where the fire started, and one adjoining owned by Miss Lily Adams, as well as a large barn and garage, owned by James F. McMurray, had been destroyed, and the Globe Laundry building on Queen street, the carpenter shop of Henry Clark on Chancery Lane, the Segee building, and Dr. Wainwright's residence and barn on Queen street; the Sherran building on St. James street, Charles O'Connor's residence at the corner of St. John and King streets; Morris Rappaport's house on King street, and several other buildings were more or less damaged. The Provincial buildings and departmental offices were directly in the path of the fire, but escaped, probably because of being all of stone or brick construction and with fire proof roofing.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply you with three ounces of or chard white for a few cents. Squeeze the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle, then put in the orchard white and shake well. This makes a fruit-juice of the very best lemon skin whitener and complexion beautifier known. Massage this fragrant, creamy lotion daily into the face, neck, arms and hands and just see how freckles, tan, sallowness, redness and roughness disappear and how smooth soft and clear the skin becomes. Used it is harmless, and the beneficial results will surprise you.

GREAT BRITAIN FAVORS CONCESSIONS TO GERMANY
New York, June 3.—The Associated Press tonight issues the following: There is a possibility that Germany may secure, as a result of her strong counter proposals, some lessening of the severity of the peace terms of the Allied and associated powers.

Germany's plea that it would be impossible to fulfill the financial requirements of the Allies, and her protests against certain territorial relinquishments have been heeded and are being discussed by the Council of Four. Paris report has it that in certain quarters of the peace conference the German viewpoint is receiving strong support.

Great Britain is said to favor a number of concessions to Germany, but France continues firm in her stand not to waver from the original terms. On the other hand the Americans are declared to be not adverse to minor concessions, but are not in favor of going the extent that the British propose.

CLEMENCEAU IN FIRM ATTITUDE

Paris, June 4.—The atmosphere in peace conference circles was full of speculation today as to impossible modifications in several clauses of the treaty with Germany, but nothing tangible is expected to develop until the outcome of the joint meetings of allied experts becomes known. It is expected that some of these meetings will be held tomorrow. At the meeting of the council of four this afternoon President Wilson made an effort to bring about an agreement as to the principle of the reply to the German counter proposals, but this meeting ended without an agreement. It is understood that Premier Clemenceau maintains a firm attitude against any revision of the treaty.

Prorogation In July

Ottawa, May 31.—An adjournment of Parliament by the end of June or early in July to be followed by a fall session is now the Government's programme. Outside of the budget and labor legislation arising out of the report of the Mathers Commission the order paper has been neatly swept clear so that there would seem to be no reason to continue beyond July 1st. A fall session is absolutely necessary as Parliament will have to ratify the peace treaty when it is signed.

There will also be legislation arising out of the treaty which will have to be passed. The Franchise Act is almost certain now to go over until the fall session. There is no immediate necessity for it as the Government is not contemplating an election and there is little likelihood of the Government being forced to go to the country in the meantime. Some other controversial legislation such as the Highways Act may be marooned until the fall.

The Girl Under the Hill

By DONALD ALLEN

Copyright, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Travelers who come that way and ascended and descended the long hill, with the creek and the bridge at its foot, always turned their heads to look at the old stone house built in colonial days. In summer it was covered with vines and stood in the shade of the pear trees, and in summer the "girl under the hill" was oftentimes caught sight of.

Why the "girl under the hill" instead of Molly Thatcher? Well, travelers would have it so, and nobody knew first why. She had been called so at sixteen, and she was still being called so at twenty. It was necessary only to inquire at any house in the village beyond the creek to know she was the daughter of old Mart Thatcher, the postmaster, and a motherless girl.

Sometimes travelers saw the old man on the porch and the daughter leaning to him as he smoked his pipe; sometimes she was working among the flowers in the yard; sometimes from the open windows of the house, they heard her singing and paused to listen. When strangers met her on the road as she went to and from the village with her basket, they remembered that she had hair that shone like gold in the sun, and a mouth that smiled, and eyes that reminded them of those of a deer. Sometimes, when a trio of young men pestered the postmistress for information he received the reply:

"She's smart and handsome and good, and it's no use for you to waste your time. Molly has never looked at any fellow traveler."

One summer day the girl under the hill carried an apronful of weeds from the flower beds out of the gate and carried them in the highway. Just as she did so an auto driven by a young man came chugging up the hill. She looked fately into the young man's eyes, and he into hers. The look did not last ten seconds, but it made her heart beat faster as she turned away, and his as he continued his journey.

An hour later, the old father hobbled out on the porch where the girl sat with her chin on her hand, staring into vacancy, and said:

"I thought you might have gone to the store. I haven't heard you singing for a long time."

"I was just—just thinking," she replied as she got up and ran away.

Autos were not a rare sight on that highway. A dozen passed up or down the hill every day, and no one minded the girl under the hill had never gone to the gate out of curiosity. If seated on the porch she had not raised her eyes. All at once, now, she found herself listening, and was vexed. She found herself at the gate, and stamped her foot as she turned away. That young man had black hair and dark eyes; he was young and handsome; he was surely a gentleman; he— But to break the chain of thought, Molly seized the broom and began to sweep the porch so vigorously that her father called out from the interior of the house:

"Hey, erri, what's the matter with you today? You swept the porch only an hour ago. Better save the broom."

Two days had gone by since Molly had thrown the weeds in the road and the young man in the auto came again. The girl was training a vine at the corner of the house, and she heard the machine stumble across the bridge and begin to climb the hill. Yes, it was the same young man, and he was looking her way. She was partly turned away, but she knew he was looking. She heard the machine almost come to a stop, but she would not look up. Then the power was increased, the chug went louder and faster, and she stood and listened until the sounds died away in the distance.

"That fellow pretty near got stuck on the hill," said the father as Molly came around to the porch.

It was just as well for "that fellow" that he wasn't there to see the loss of her head and the snap in her eyes. She believed that he had almost stopped to stare at her, and she was rejoiced that her attitude had been one of disdain.

That is, after thinking it over, she didn't know whether she was or not.

Three days later, as she sat sewing and her father slept in his wicker, she heard an auto ascend the hill and stop in front of the house. The road bushes hid it from her sight, but a moment later the dark-haired young man was standing unmoved before her and saying:

"I beg your pardon, miss, but could you lend me an ax while I make some slight repairs to my auto? No sorry to bother you. Ah, I see an ax over there. Don't get up, please. I shall return it directly."

In her confusion at his sudden advent and strange request the girl had simply looked at him. She gave her father a shake to wake him up, briefly explained matters and disappeared into the house. When the ax was returned, and while the borrower was wandering where the lender had disappeared, the old postmaster replied:

"That's all right. Always ready to oblige folks in trouble. So your auto broke down, eh?"

"Well—just a slight accident."

"Lucky for you that you wasn't coming downhill instead of going up."

"Yes, it was."
