FREDERICTON, DECEMBER 17, 1892.

MR. BLAIR AND YORK.

The banquet given to Mr. Blair by his throw up the sponge. friends at the Queen hotel on Thursday evening, was a most successful and happy event. The large number of representative citizens who assembled to do honor to the distinguished guest of the evening, shows conclusively that Mr. Blair still retains the confidence and esteem of the great majority of the people of Fredericton. The many sincere expressions of regret and sorrow at the circumstances which induced him to seek fresh fields for the future, leaves no room for doubt that he occupies the first place in the hearts and affections of the people of his native city. Indeed, the only thing which in any way marred the happiness and good feeling which prevailed on all hands, was the knowledge that the personal and political friends of York's foremost son were assembled together, not only to fittingly recognize his eminent services as a public from the city and county to which for ful and devoted service in the councils of the province, to listen to his valedictory to the true and tried friends of a life time,

It is easy to understand that expressions Mr. Blair from Fredericton, should throw a shadow over an otherwise happy occasion. It was in Fredericton that Mr. Blair was born and educated. Here he sion, married, and settled, apparently, for life. In the course of time his abilities and aspirations marked him out for a political career. His first two appeals to the people were unsuccessful. The third time, 1878, he was elected, and from that that it was the intention of the party who period until Oct. 22nd, 1892, he continued to be York's representative in the assembly of the province. In the year 1883, was probably to be general around Home as leader of the opposition, he succeeded man. Whether the chief duties of such a on the shores affords the young people in overthrowing the party to which he dignitary were to rock the "cradle of was opposed, and was called on to form a state," or chase out the hens, does not apthe present, he has been the leader of a ministry which has had, in a larger degree than falls to the lot of most governments, the confidence and support of the province. That during these years he was a good friend of York, there is ample evidence on all hands. The influence which he exerted in the council chamber. naturally placed him in a position to guard and forward the interest of the county he represented, in all legitimate ways, and it was nothing more than natural that when any public favors were to be bestowed, York came in for the lion's share. This fact seemed to be generally recognized by all the counties of the province, and while there were at times, and particularly during elections, many complaints at the patronage which went to York, it was generally taken for granted that as long as Mr. Blair remained the premier of the province, York was bound to have a pretty good show. Until last October, York seemed to recognize and appreciate these services, and over and above all, to be proud of her son who, by honest work and ability, had won for himself a dominion repureputation, and who was easily recognized as the foremost public man of the province. Great then was the surprise over the whole province when the news went abroad that York county had defeated Mr. Blair. Keener was the disappointment among the better thinking and more level-headed portion of the county, when the conviction was forced home that their leader had been rejected for other men. When the smoke of the battle field had cleared away, and it was found that the leader, who had led his army to a magnificent victory, was among the fallen, the peoand near friends of the contracting parties. ple of York began to realize that they had made the mistake of their St. John. political lives. They saw that they had been deceived and blinded by the enemy, and that in a whirlwind of fanaticism they had struck down their best friend. When they realized this fact, however, it was too late; the blow had been struck, and the man who had served them faithfully and well for fourteen years, who had championed the cause of York as no other man before him had ever done, who had given to them the best vears of his life, and the best efforts of his skill and ability, was lost to them

No wonder that the wiser portion of the county was surprised and dissapointed. Each one felt that the defeat of Mr. Blair was a severe loss to York, and a public calamity as well. While all recognized the right of York to choose whom she would to represent her, there could not but be a widespread feeling, that in rejecting Mr. Blair and his ticket for the men who are to bly, on the issue that was raised, the county had made a mistake. Indeed, it is safe to say that this is now the general feeling among the better class of the people; and that if York had a chance to-morrow, she would reverse her disgraceful and suicidal verdict of October last. What she did do, however, and what she would do, are two different things. She has taken her choice, and she must be content for the next four years with what she has got.

From a local standpoint, to Mr. Blair's friends this is a melancholy satisfaction in seeing him sit for another county. From a provincial standpoint, the people of York, in common with the people of the province, are glad to see him still at the head of affairs. They have full confidence that under his wise and prudent administration, the affairs of the province will make the county had a marrow escape form drowing and the people of the province will be province w bly, on the issue that was raised, the Hereafter the rinks of the Fredericton own, while they will be deprived in coming years of the privilege of fighting for him personally at the at the polls, they will never forget that he is still York's foremost son, and as long as he continues to lead the fight in the political arena, he will have in his old county of York a strong and loyal band of friends and workers, who will strive in the future as they have in the past, to give him a liberal support on the floors of the house of assembly.

Socially Fredericton's loss by the removal of Mr. Blair and his settimable wife and family, will be very great. During his life-long residence here he has proved himself a good citizen and a warm friend the removal in their trouble.
