In discussing the Provincial elections the chief Tory organ is frank enough to say, no doubt with the object of encouraging the opponents of Mr. Mowat to make a dead set on his Government, that "they never had a better opportunity of taking from him and his party that great mass of patronage and that large measures of power which he has used without scruple for partisan pur poses and for the hindering of the success of the Dominion Government and the National Policy." Mr. Mowat has nothing to do with the arranging of the tariff, and therefore has no power to interfere with the National Policy. But the fact that the National Policy is dragged in once more shows that the Con servatives are still conjuring with that cry and intend to pull it in by the heels have little else to fall back upon. But the most significant remark made by the organ is that this is the time to make a a large measure of power." This is the platform. It has only two planks, One is patronage and the other is power.
