Returns Show Many Deaths in Dominion Coal

Mines Ottawa, Dec. 31-Statistics compil ed by the commission of conservation show that the death rate in Canada coal mines is much higher than in any other civilized country. In 1902, the year of the Fernie disaster, the death rate per 100 men employed, above and below ground, reached the maximum rate of 13.25. The average rate for the ten years preceding 1910. owever, was 4.79. The United States omes next with an average rate for he same period of 3.43. Perhaps the worst aspect of the ituation is the fact that the death ate from coal mine accidents has een steadily on the increase in Canda for a number of years. The minimum rate of 1.83 was reached in 897. In 1909 the rate was 4.21. Durng the same time there has been a teady decrease in all the leading

That danger inherent in coal ming can be largely eliminated is shown the low constant death rates in Freat Britain. Coal mine explosions much more frequent in Canada d United States than in any of the ropean countries. The following example is exceedngly significant. In 1850 the fatality ate in Belgian coal mines was as nigh as the present Canadian death ate while at the present time it averages the lowest in the world. This ecline in the death rate was due to the combined efforts of mine owners. workmen and the administration of mines, to the diffusion of technical and professional knowledge and to organization for the scientific study f accidents.

Although the death rate in metalliferous mines in Canada is lower than in the coal mines it is much higher than in any of the European countries.
