Grand Opera.

The first of the Grand Opera concerts brought a full house at the Casino Theatre last night. While the main interest and expectation perhaps was centred in Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" yet the concert programme which preceded its production proved far the more enjoyable. The honours in this first part certainly fell to M. Edgar Littleton and Sacchetti. The former in "Il lacerato spirito" (Verdi) was most satisfying in expression and in tone. A baritone voice well under control, and accompanied by a sympathetic temperament, will prove in most cases to be the voice that reaches one, and M. Littleton would have been heard with great pleasure in more than fell to his share on the programme. M. Sacchetti has a very pleasing to the ear, and his solo from "La Boheme" (Puccini) was unhesitatingly encoored. His appearance in five of the ten items threw most of the burden on his shoulders and to him must be given the palm for making this part of the programme successful.

Mme. Hutcheson in her solo from "I Puritani" (Bellini) displayed a remarkable clearness in the runs which abound in this piece, but unfortunately relied a great deal on the "vibrato" in the voice; while it may add sometimes, yet the continual use of it, besides being unartistic, is absolutely unnecessary and unpleasant. Her encore "Laddie" was one of the most enjoyable items. The management has a difficult task to get together a fully-satisfying aggregation of singers but it would not be honest or fair to say that the majority of those singing last night were better than we can produce here. In the Trio, Quartette and Sextette there was too much striving after big tone to make the items satisfying. Clearness and fitness were certainly lacking and whether it was that the Hall was too small for the voices or whatever it was, the harmonious blending that is so pleasingly an attribute of part singing was wanting.

The "tabloid" opera took a little over a half hour, and in its action and without the aid of the libretto does not convey much to the listener. Mme. Gabbi appeared to better advantage in this than in the preceding programme, and took her part with much spirit, being ably helped by M. Gatti, who has rather a good voice, perhaps more "robusto" than M. Sacchetti.

"Cavalleria Rusticana" is practically the only one of Mascagni's works that merits any "fame," and even it is not likely ever to be classed among the "great" operas. The Intermezzo played by the pianist to a great extent was unfortunately lost in the murmur of conversation which arose during its performance. The shortness of the opera was a disappointment and it is to be hoped that the succeeding ones will be longer. It is certainly a big undertaking to bring down even the twelve persons or so that comprise the company and with the evident support which is being given by St. John's theatre-goers, the manager should be encouraged to bring absolutely as good material as he possibly can get. It looks as if St. John's had put up the full guarantee for three nights, and in return they will appreciate the best.

Well Done, Ben!

Saturday afternoon, a little girl named Kilkenny fell into the river just below Browning's Bridge. Mr. Ben Squires, of the Southside, was working near and seeing the child fall from the concrete wall into the swollen and rapidly flowing river jumped after her and catching her swam on shore with her. His prompt and clever act saved the little one's life. That is not the first time that Ben Squires has been prompt in cases of emergency.

How Many Women, Do You suppose Make Their Own Clothes?

Sewing and Dressmaking are not lost arts. We just imagine they are. And furthermore, these arts are going to become more popular each year.

There is good economy in home dressmaking, and there is often mighty good style. Some of the prettiest little suits you see on the street HAVE BEEN HANDTAILORED AT HOME.

To-day, every style that is worth while is carefully portrayed in some style book. Those books will tell you exactly how many yards of material to buy; just what trimming to get; they will give you the pattern with instructions how to cut the cloth and how to fit the suit.

This all sounds like foolish A. B. C's to the women who make their own clothes, but any woman who doesn't tell you that her greatest dread is actually cutting into a piece of good goods.

But still this home dressmaking is being done in the best of families and most successfully done at that.

Do you want more clothes? And prettier clothes? Do you want more distinctive clothes? Do you want to pay about one half what you have been used to paying?

Then just take up this paper and look for the advertising of the new fall materials. Then go get some style book and choose your pattern. Call in a dressmaker for the first few times if you wish. But, if you watch, before you realize it you will be able to go ahead, absolutely alone.

And after that, you will never again know what it is to be without something to wear.

This is a foolish age—an age where we keep failing to rely upon ourselves. It is time somebody took us and shook us hard.

Look over some of these Dress Goods Ads now from day to day. Make up your mind that you can make lots of your own things yourself.

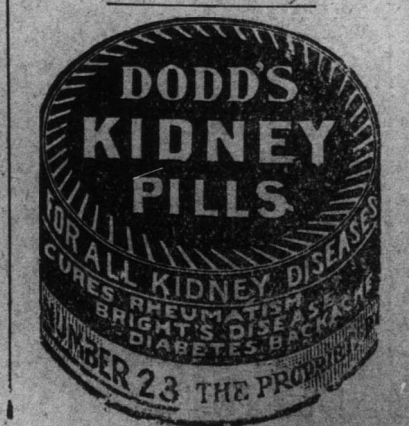

And before you know it, you will be better dressed than you have ever been before, and on half the money.

Orphans Entertained.

At Pennywell Road, at the residence of Mr. P. H. Hudson, the little Methodist orphans were given a lawn party yesterday afternoon and had a general good time. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson did their utmost to give the little ones a pleasant afternoon, and certainly they succeeded in doing so. Romping and games of various kinds kept the children busy until 4.30, when all sat down to a spread which would tempt the palate of an epicure. The children with appetites sharpened by the keen air soon had this part of the evening's entertainment concluded, and then after grace was sung more games were indulged in, and the children left for the Orphanage at 7 p.m. The day was possibly one of the most pleasant in their young lives and they will never forget the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Hudson and the other good friends of Bowser Street Church who gave them such a pleasant time.

Old Comrades Association Meet.

The adjourned annual meeting of the C. L. B. Old Comrades Association was held in the Armoury last night and a large number of members were present. The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read and showed the Association to be in a flourishing condition, after which the election of officers for the ensuing year took place and resulted as follows: President, C. H. Peter; Vice-President, J. Hooley; Treasurer, S. Barrall; Secretary, H. Green; Guard, A. Snow. The Association, whose first year was so successful, hopes to make this year even more so. Several new applicants were admitted to membership, and after much important business had been transacted the meeting adjourned.
