Families in Parliament.

CHIPS OF THE OLD BLOCK.

The present Parliament, like some of its distinguished predecessors, is not without its family ties. From the time of the elder and the younger Pitt, down through the glowing days of Gladstone, with his son Herbert becoming Home Secretary and his grandson, Mr. G. C. Gladstone, sitting in the last Parliament, onward to the present House of Commons with the Geddes brothers holding great offices, and Captain Terrell sitting near by his father, Mr. George Terrell, there have been a good many instances of family relations in Parliament. Few have been more distinguished, of course, than the Chamberlain family, says Charles King in the "New Illustrated." First, Joseph Chamberlain, once a mighty figure dominating the House of Commons; then his son Austen, suffering from being the son of his great father, but more than making good as a statesman in his own personality, and becoming a most striking Chancellor of the Exchequer. And now for the first time we have Mr. Neville Chamberlain, son of Joseph and brother of Austen, sitting in the present Parliament, after having been Lord Mayor of Birmingham and one of the pioneers of the great work of bringing together employers and employed.

Heirs of Long Tradition.

The Cecil family is one of the most remarkable in our Parliamentary history. One of them was a statesman of Elizabeth. One was Lord Salisbury, the great Foreign Minister and Premier in the reign of Victoria. At the present moment there are, among the Cecils, Lord Salisbury in the Upper House; Lord Robert Cecil, late Minister of Blockade; Lord Hugh Cecil, one of the most fascinating figures in the Commons; Lord Wolmer, a Unionist M.P.; Lord Wolmer's father, Lord Selborne, up in the Gilded Chamber; and, perhaps greatest of all, Mr. Balfour, cousin of the Cecils, once Prime Minister, and recently a great figure at the Peace Conference and, in his own words, "A House of Commons man." Lord Wolmer had two grandfathers who may be called great grand-fathers. One was Lord Salisbury, Prime Minister of England, the other Lord Selborne, Lord Chancellor of England. Lord Wolmer's mother was a Cecil.

Sir William Harcourt, one of Queen Victoria's Ministers, and a Plantagenet, had two sons in the Commons. One, the resplendent Lulu, has become Lord Harcourt; Lulu's half-brother, Mr. Robert Harcourt, who has been an M.P., is a grandson of Motley, the famous historian.

Record of the Harmsworths.

Few family associations have been so remarkable in our Parliamentary history as the Harmsworth family. Mr. Alfred Harmsworth is Viscount Northcliffe in the House of Lords. His brother, Mr. Harold Harmsworth, is Lord Rothermere, also in the Upper House. Another brother, Mr. Cecil Harmsworth, is a Minister of the Crown, and yet another brother, Sir Leicester Harmsworth, Bart., is one of the best-known Liberal M.P.s. Thus, of four brothers, two are in the House of Lords, and two are in the House of Commons, and of the latter one is on the Treasury Bench, making statements for the Government.

A father and son association that flourished in the Liberal House of recent time, but who are there no longer, are Russel Read and his son Walter Read.

Turning to the other great Party, two Unionist brothers have distinguished themselves, and are both in the House now. These are Mr. Godfrey Locker-Lampson, formerly of the Home Office, and Mr. Oliver Locker-Lampson happily restored to the House from the terrific dangers of his command of armoured cars in the remotest wilds of Russia.

Lord Lansdowne has had a son, Lord Kerry, in the Commons, and there still remains in the House, Mr. William Archer Redmond, son of the late John Redmond, and nephew of the late Willie Redmond, both of whom were M. P.'s for many years.

in her bright, girlish way, "I want you to vote for my father."

It is not the custom, however, to use this simple phrase in debate. For instance, when Joseph Chamberlain was sitting in the House, his son Austen, in order to illustrate some point in a speech just made by the elder Chamberlain, said, not "as was said by my father," but "As was said by the right honourable gentleman the member for West Birmingham."

Lord Robert Cecil in a similar case would not say "As pointed out by my brother Hugh" but "As pointed out by the noble lord the member for Oxford University."

It is not unknown in the heat and fight of debate for one relative to attack the position of another relative, just as the ordinary members cross swords across the floor in apparent anger, and then go off together for a good dinner.

Sagona Back From Labrador.

The s.s. Sagona, Capt. Parsons, arrived from Labrador ports last evening, having been as far North as Nain, which place was reached on the 17th inst. Unfavorable weather was experienced at the outset of the trip going north, but since the 15th, conditions have been all that could be desired. Capt. Parsons reports a decided improvement in the fishery generally, and but for the presence of ice, good work would have been done. From Paul's Island to Cape Harrison, the ice is still inshore, making it impossible to keep time in the water, and when it lacks off, good hauls are made. At Illak, thirteen or fourteen schooners are reported with from 500 to 800 qtls., and with every prospect of getting full fares. Turnavick is still packed with ice, and no fishing has been done there for the season. The ice is still about Cape Harrison, but several schooners fishing there have done well. In Mackovic Bay cod is plentiful, and a number of schooners are there picking up good trips. Further up the coast there is a general improvement, and if fine weather holds there is a prospect of a fair voyage being landed. The majority of the "floaters" are north of Nain, and have not been heard from. It is expected however, that most of the floaters will get saving voyages. The Sagona brought about 200 packages of freight and the following passengers: R. French, W. Trenchard, D. LeDrew, H. Masters, J. R. Young, P. J. Wade, J. Grogan, A. B. Thurston, J. A. Thurston, E. Hudson, J. Benoit, Mrs. A. Day, J. C. Foster and wife, F. Sullivan, and eight steerage.
