A diver states that the companion way of the Daphne is blocked up by a solid mass of bodies. It appears the men who were at work below when the ship went over rushed from their work and became jammed in the passageway. Some bodies still have tools in their hands. The diver thinks there is still in the vessel at least as many corpses as have already been recovered. Forty-one bodies have been found up to to-night, when darkness stopped the search. The divers say they felt many more bodies.

Law Suit That has Been fought for Fifty-Eight Years.

A Washington correspondent says : For property in New Orleans, and will probably not be finally settled as long as the city can legally fight against it. It is now eightytwo years since Daniel Clark, a handso Mississippi came to Philadelphia to spend the winter. Clark was a gay fellow, and he took in all the pleasures of the then metropolis of America. In his rounds he met French beauty, and fell in love with her. This woman's name was Zulime Carrier, and This woman's name was Zulime Carrier, and at the same time she was living with a Frenchman named La Grange. Clark met her. Whether she was married to La Grange or not is one of the points in question. The defendants claim she was his legal wife. At any rate when Clark met her in 1805, she left La Grange, and went to live with Clark. The supreme court of the United States has decided that she was privately married to Clark, and that she was merely La Grange's mistress.

In 1806, seventy-seven years ago, Myra Clark was born. She was the only child Zulime Carrier had by Daniel Clark. At that time Clark sent Zulime to New Orleans and acted as a bachelor. He engaged him self in marriage, and formed other connections producing other offspring. He denied the fact that he had married Zulime, and when she came back and pushed the case in when she came back and pushed the case in the Philadelphia courts she was unable to succeed. She finally took up with a Dr. Gardette, and lived with him until he died. But while Clark would have nothing to do with the mother he took good care of the child. Myra Clark was well educated by him, and was treated by him as a daughter. He went again into Indiau trading at New Orleans and amassed an immense fortune. In 1813, just seventy years ago, he died, and a will was produced showing that all of his property was left to his mother and to the city of New Orleans. Myra Clark, then only seven years old, was apparently penniless, and the executors took charge of the estate.

when Myra grew to the age of 20 she married a Mr. Whitney, and then she began to contest the will. She claimed she was the only legitimate daughter of Daniel Clark, and that his property was hers. The claim was at once hotly contested, and Mr. Whitney died before it was tried.
