TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 13, 1910.

A PEOPLE'S TRIBUNAL. Conspicuous among the features that have marked the administration of Governor Hughes of New York State is the replacement of the three old and inefficient boards that were supposed to supervise public service corporations by two public service commissions. In his first message to the jegislature he strongly urged that the 111/2 cents, as compared with 19.3 cents promises he had made in his electoral campaign should be embodied in an act, and the bill, which was keenly opposed by the threatened interests. finally became law on July 1, 1907. Two commissions were constituted-one for the first district, comprising the Borough of Greater New York, and one

The scrutiny and regulation of all franchises sought and issued. The powers delegated to these commissions, says Mr. Marcosson, were more drastic than were ever before Governor Hughes took immense pains to secure men of conspicuous ability. As the salaries had been made adequate his choice was not hampered and the commissioners immediately justified their selection by themselves exercising equal care and discrimination in the appointment of their subordinates. After three years of upbuilding the commissioners have behind them a staff of seven hundred experts in every department of work falling under their jurisdiction.

Their way of performing the highly important duties entrusted to them provides an instructive object lesson to all similar bodies. "By law the offices are open from 8 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night," Mr. Marcosson explained. "There is no jingle of red tape; every citizen is welcome. At the outset the word 'publicity'-the terror of the corporate the records of every hearing, every are constantly engaged in "unsought, first-hand investigation." Very early were met with the objections, especially from the street railway companies in Manhattan: "We cannot cause we have no money." This led to the chairman's declaration that the commissioners could not do permanent construction work until they knew the exact financial condition of the companies and on his motion was held the celebrated investigation into the affairs of the holding companies, which resuited in the revelations that amazed and shocked the whole country. Today the closest watch is kept over the operation of all public services thru the commission's own inspecting staff and they have imposed a uniform system of accounting thru which the capitalization practices of all franchise-holding corporations can be supervized and regulated. Many issues of unnecessary and burdensome securities have been prevented, and the story of this part of the commissioners' work makes it plain how necessary the inclusion of this power is in all public service commissions.

The chemical name of this curative agent is dioxydiamidoarsenobenzol. It is popularly called "606" by Prof. Ehrlich, for the reason that it was the 606th preparation compounded by him in an effort to find a cure. The first 605 preparations proved to be failures. A small supply of the drug has been placed in the hands of Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the Rockefeller Institute for Research, in this city, and in the hands of Prof. L. P. Barker of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. Within a few days, however, limited supplies of the curative agent, which is not a serum but a definite chemical compound, will be furnished to Prof. Anders of the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia; Prof. Simon, Baland Dr. William Kohlmann, New Orleans.

How Ontario and Toronto Are Treated.

affect the regulation of freights all thru Ontario and the West. It will be baulked, too, if it is possible by the railways, who have their head-quarters in Montreal.

One would have thought that the ministers who represent the peo-of Ontario in the Ottawa cabinet would have had some concern of Ontario in the Ottawa capatet would have had some concernate this anti-Toronto railway policy that centres in Ottawa and in Montreal. But so far they have sat mum on the subject. The Ontario newspapers, for some reason best known to themselves, perhaps because some of them do job printing, have played the game with the Montreal magnates. But at last The World has wakened the public mind in the matter, and has forced the railways to offer some excuses, and some of them have gone so far as to say that they intend to alter their policy for the better. So far, so good; but the agitation has only begun for justice to this province in the way of railway treatment and in the way of canal improvement and also in the way of giving rates for freight from Toronto that are given to freight from Montreal. How many people know that Montreal has a preference in the way of railway freights?

"Do you know," said a prominent American who was traveling in Canada the other day, "that you are suffering here in Canada from a disease that prevails somewhat with as but which we've started in to stamp out?"

'What is that?" "Why, your chief executives in your railways, in your financial companies, in your big concerns, are afraid to have understudies, assistants able to do their work at a moment's notice, and whose presence prevents any pressing matter from falling down for a moment. A chief executive that gets into the way of taking things easy or wants to go on jaunts, is not considered by us any longer as up to the big game, and we keep men on tap to take their place on a moment's notice. Why, I saw one of your greatest institutions with five men either old or worn out standing around the top and not a young man in sight. Dry rot will strike that institution some day."

Furthermore, one-tenth of all the railway train service in this province is demoralized by excursion business. It's time we had a law that regular trains are run on time, on regular tickets only, and with ample accommodation for regular travelers; and that all cheap excursion business be done on special trains, and that the railway companies be forced to put on extra hands sufficient to handle this special traffic. It's a crime in the eyes of the Montreal magnates for a local agent to hire any one to help him to sell tickets in Fair week. Hence there is a jam at every local station, and regular passengers are delayed for hours. As we said above, ten per cent, of the regular service in a year is demoralized by this cheap and crowded travel. Are we against cheap travel? No. But, let the regular travel go on and let the special travel stand on its own bottom. For two weeks the regular travel out of Toronto has been demoralized and for one week out of Montreal. Where are the railway commissioners? Preparing their judgment on express tolls? Or have they gone off to hear a case? Oh, you Overworked Commissioners!
