CHAPTER XXV.

While all gazed in wonder and awe at the stranger, Haggal continued: "A servant of Jesse bade me come hither in the name of God. Art thou he who sent?" "Jesse is my father," replied Gaal. "He did send for thee for what he would no longer have—news of his son Jether."
Haggal bowed. Then he spoke:
"Tel him, then, that Jether his son is dead. God's hand smote him at Jerusa-dead. God's hand smote him at Jerusalem."

Naomi interrupted him indignantly.

"Why sayest thou that?" she demanded.

"Art thou his enemy to tell such a lie?"

Haggal bowed again.

"It is no He, as I know it. But that I am his enemy I do admit, as must be all true sons of Abram. Once it was my thought to prove his friend because he, too, seemed one of us. But ere he died, he did what no man of the seen cam ever forgive. I have no wish, fair maiden, to bring a cloud upon his household, but ye did send for me, and I must speak the truth. Now let me go."

Haggal turned and for the first time recognized Jether, who half supported himself on one ar mas he gazed up at Haggal.

"O—thou still livest." said Haggal.

the three great war necessities.

In a great hotel, under expert direction with its resultant elimination of waste, 1100 people are better fed and kept warm, with a total consumption of less FOOD and COAL, and with the help of much less SERVICE, than is required in their own homes. Food, Coal and Service saved constitute a direct contribution to the War, which needs all of each that it can get. Health is now more than ever essential.

ATLANTIC CITY offers it in her Gulf-stream-tempered, germicide, sea-island, winter climate, free from dust or dirt, and laden with the ozone of the ocean. Her outdoor health-giving recreations and her indoor entertainments and amusements are equally beneficial.
