

The American reader turns over its striking and beautiful pages, in which the genius of the artist shows all its grace without its grotesqueness, he cannot help remarking how desultory of the peculiar charm of association our own great city is. Not only are the houses gone in which the noted people of former generations lived, and the streets which they walked changed beyond recognition, but the very fables are modern and local. There was a great deal of sly fun in an article published some years ago in the "Nation" upon the Knickerbocker literature, and Mr. Sparrowgrass took up the cudgels with great vigor in defence of the reputations that he thought assailed. But, after all, how frail the tenure of many of these reputations was! Indeed, how easily like his own! Fifty years hence some reader, relishing the fresh and stinging humor of the "Sparrowgrass Papers," will pore over the biographical dictionary, and wish that he could see some spot especially associated with the pleasant writer. But if in that remote future there still be a Warren Street and a number seventy-three (or have we already forgotten it?), will it be any satisfaction to know that in a house which was then number seventy-three Mr. Sparrowgrass plied his trade in wine and cigars, and that Halleck used often to drop in and charm a morning hour?

In Florence you may read a plate set in front of a house, "Here lived Michael Angelo," and in London the house of Byron has, or to have, a similar plate. But with us the house would be pulled down for the fame would be forgotten before the plate was engraved—Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for June.
