Algonquin National Park.

SALMON TROUT EVERYWHERE
IN ALGONQUIN PARK.

AS SUMMER approaches, the great desire of people who live in the busy cities and the young men who have put in several hard months of study at college, is to get away to a resort where rest and recreation combined will build up the overworked physical body and rejuvenate the constitution for the arduous labors that the future has in store. It is becoming more and more the endeavor of all classes to be among Nature's unadorned solitudes for a while at least, if not for the whole summer. Many prefer the summer resort where modern hotels are in evidence, and where, in addition to the recuperating ozone, the pleasures of city life may be enjoyed. Others pass their summer at the seaside, and a number cross the Atlantic. But of all the pleasures and beautiful diversions that can be secured, there is nothing like an outing in "God's out-of-doors" among the beauties of Nature amid the fastnesses that are quickly becoming further from our reach. The confining influences the year round and the impure atmosphere in the heated term of summer necessitate the change, apart from the predisposition which exists, more or less developed in every being.

Camping, with all its pleasures, is probably the most healthful way to enjoy an outing in the woods, and where one has good fishing, beautiful camping spots, clear and pellucid water for drinking and bathing, magnificent scenery, interesting canoeing routes, and all the pleasures that can be derived in outdoor life at an altitude of 1,500 to 2,000 feet above the sea level, a week, two weeks, a month or the entire summer can be spent with the utmost profit. Such a region is the territory known as the "Algonquin National Park," situated on the Ottawa Division of the Grand Trunk Railway System, about two hundred miles north of the city of Toronto, and one hundred and seventy miles west of the capital of the Dominion—Ottawa.

Canada possesses many stretches of fine scenery, and the many districts in the Province of Ontario are fast becoming known to the thousands of summer tourists who each year spend their summers away from home. There is a variety of landscape such as is found in no other country, and when it is considered that 45 per cent of the entire area of the Province of Ontario, exclusive of the Great Lakes, is made up of water stretches of rivers and lakes, one can imagine the scenic grandeur which is found. There are the wild, rugged shores of the Georgian Bay, the quiet stillness and charms of the Maganetawan River, the symmetrical beauty and picturesqueness of the Muskoka Lakes, and the wild, natural beauty of Temagami.

While many are familiar with several of these districts—the "Algonquin Park," a new and attractive region, little known to the lover of rod and gun and the tourist, lies within easy reach, where all the summer attractions that appeal to the denizen of the city are found. While thousands are familiar with the better-known resorts in Canada which have developed into such popularity within the last few years, it is known by a comparative few only that there exists close at hand a preserve, as it were, set aside by the Provincial Government of Ontario solely for the delectation of mankind, where true sportsmen are welcomed and where the fishing is not in name only, but where the gamiest of black bass, speckled trout and salmon trout are found in goodly numbers; where the lakes and rivers possess a beauty of their own—a wilderness, a surprise; where the fauna and flora are found in luxuriant profusion; where the forests are heavily timbered and the shores of the lakes beautifully clothed with a raiment of pine and balsam, and where every breath of the pure air gives new life.

The "Algonquin National Park" is a region that has already won favor with a large number of travelers who are looking for new fields to explore, and for a place where civilization has not yet encroached upon Nature's domains, and
