"SHIP AHOY!"

A Story in thirty-six Cable Lengths.

THIRD CABLE LENGTH.

HOW JOHN ANDERSON MADE LOVE.

Canbury is not fashionable, but it is comfortable. The old red brick houses look snug and prosperous.

There is an air of wealth about the district, and old-fashioned ease. The red walls indicate warmth; and once beyond them and their coating of ivy and overshadowing trees, you expect to find solid furniture, good plate, and fine linens.

You are quite right in your expectations—they are all there; and as to venueing, it is not known in the older parts. There are cellars to the houses in Canbury; none of your West End cellars, under the pavement, with an iron disk in the centre for the admission of coals, but rare old cellars of a hundred years and more, with fine fungus growths among the brickwork, and a glorious smell of damp sawdust. That you know in a moment that there are blue there with rare dry natural sherry that has been lying for years, and rich, tawny old port next door, whose beaming breeches glorious fancies in the mind of him who sips it over the dark, glossy mahogany of its owner.

And that is not all, for here and there, too, in Canbury are bins of that rare, priceless old wine, of glistening topaz hue, rich Madeira, treasured up as a store that can never be replenished.

Your citizens have long favoured Canbury as a convenient abode; and those who have never cared to migrate westward cling to the old place still, to look down with a solid respectability upon the new, semi-detached villa people, who have hemmed them in on every side, but have still left Canbury in statu quo.

It was at a quarter to one that Captain John Anderson, with his cheek flushed and heart palpitating, pulled at the bell by the old iron gateway of Brunswick House—that great, red-brick, ivy-covered mansion that faces you as you go down from Upper Street toward the Tower.

He had meant to ring gently; but the bell sent forth a clamorous peal which brought a formal-looking footman in drab to the door, where he stood for a moment, and then condescended to come down to the iron gate.

"Why didn't you come in—the gate was open?" said the footman, looking his visitor over superciliously; for Samuel had a most profound contempt for Shipping street, and the bluff, handsome captain savoured to him of the shop.

But Captain Anderson was distrustful and merely saying "Tell your master I'm here," passed on to the hall, from whence he was shown into the drawing-room, where, as the door closed behind him, he stood with pal-pitating heart, trembling and nerveless, and with a stifling sensation at his throat in the presence of his fate.

"You don't believe it, perhaps, you!
May be you are not strong, and big, and sturdy, and desperately in love with a sweet-faced, lovable girl, in the first flush of her beauty. You do not believe perhaps, in a huge Hercules becoming slave to a beautiful Omphale?" "I am sorry for you; I do; and, what is more, I have history on my side, with hundreds of cases where the strong are really the weak.
It is a pity, but all the same it is so; and the bigger, and stronger, and more muscular you are, the greater shall be your thrallment when you are led captive by some such fair maiden as was May Halley.

Shall I try to paint her? I will, though I have but white paper and black ink. No; upon second thoughts, I will not, lest I fall; and therefore let me say that, without the aid of classic features, she was all that could be desired in a sweet, girlish maiden, whose eyes were cheeks peachy, forehead

As Captain Anderson, he became aware a tall, fair young man of bidding a lady gooding with great empha-hand. Then it seem-was closed, and he all clouds; and he below them on the ley above them in Then she spoke common-place, but sufficient to thrill him through and through.

"I am glad to see you safely back, Captain Anderson. Take a seat.
Papa will be disengaged very soon.

John Anderson did not make any response, but stood, hat in hand, gazing at the fair girl before him till she flushed scarlet, and half turned away with resentment in her bright eyes.

He could not have spoken then to have saved his life, for a great struggle was going on within him. For a few moments the room seemed to spin round, and he saw May Halley through a fiery mist; then two red anger spots began to burn on his cheeks; a dull, dead, aching sense of pain fell upon his heart; and he stood with his hands clenching till the great veins stood out swollen and knotted, while the dew stood upon his forehead in big drops.

For John Anderson had awakened to the fact that the idol he had worshipped now for years, without ever thinking of speaking of his love, was also the idol of another. He had seen that tall, fair young man—smooth, gentlemanly, with the world's own polish, fashionable of exterior—bending over May's hand, and saying words that must have been of a complimentary nature; for she had smiled pleasantly as he bade him adieu.

Yes, and he had taken that hand in his—his, such a soft, white, well-card-for hand; while the hand John Anderson clenched, till the nails pressed savagely into his flesh, was brown, hardened, and rugged with toil. There was a great far mark, too, that had refused to be washed off; and as for a moment the young man's eyes fell, it was to see that black stain there.
