FIRST AID FOR THE SHOCKED

Electric shocks are becoming so numerous, due to the increasing use of electricity in all walks of life, that first aid organizations are emphasizing safety measures in giving relief. Where the shock is obviously too great to allow for human contact to assist the victim, a nonconductor such as rubber gloves, a dry wood stick or dry cloth can be used safely. If it is necessary to cut a wire the safest way is to use a hatchet or axe with a wood handle that is dry and to turn the face away to avoid the flash that might ruin the sight.
