

At last of them. I've all down at last of them. And now I'm glad that you have down.

The Irony of Government.

A plain, even man once gave quite a lesson. There he stood with his hands on his hips.

MOY O'BRIEN.

A TALE OF IRISH LIFE.

By Miss SHERWOOD ("MELISSA.")

CHAPTER XLVII.—(CONTINUED.)

The good Sister of Charity who nursed my poor mother till she died said that little picture was tied round my waist by the dear hands that were soon after cold and stiff in death.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"Why, I remember young McDonnell, of Moneydonnart quite well," he said; "and a fine-looking young fellow he was."

CHAPTER XLIX.

"On Lough Neagh's banks, as the fishermen say. When the clear cold sun's dawning, He sees the round towers of other days."

CHAPTER L.

"You look tired, George," and then they confessed what she had kept from her grandfather, that she and the servants had scarcely closed their eyes all through the night.

CHAPTER LI.

"And how the children passed the week at home," she said. "I'm sure you'll be glad to hear of them."

"Well, it's got papa's name on it. No one knew it. Mr. Gilmarin read what was on it."

CHAPTER XLVI.

"Then I remember when you were in the States, you were in the States."

CHAPTER XLVII.

"I've sent two lads scouring the country to find Mr. Corcoran," he continued, "I expect him every minute."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"The April number of this vigorous young magazine is the best that has yet been published, its table of contents showing great diversity of material and a most excellent list of contributors."

CHAPTER XLIX.

"The April issue of LIPPICOTT'S is mainly devoted to Columbus and the Exposition. The complete novel, 'Columbus in Love,' is by George Alfred Townsend ('GARY')."
