PARIS, June 1.
The French Cabinet under the Premiership of M. Doumergue, has decided to resign. The chief factor in bringing about this resignation is understood to be the uncertainty of it being able to control a majority of the chamber of deputies, where some changes were brought about in the composition of its numerous groups at the recent general elections.

HENLEY, June 1.
The arson squad to-day destroyed by fire the Parish Church of St. Mary's, Wargrave, three miles from here, on the Thames. The church contained many priceless treasures including some bells four centuries old, which were melted in Mr. Cliff, T. E. Hurst Hodgson, Ad-

Residents Complain.

Residents of Hamilton Street, living in the vicinity of the F. B. Wood Co.'s factory, complain of the smoke from that quarter which makes it impossible to put out clothes to dry, or even raise their windows when the wind is from the west.

Several of them are now drafting a petition to be placed before the Council, with a view to having the management raise the stack, or install a smoke consumer, as is used elsewhere with satisfactory results.

Edison Talking Pictures scored Last Night.

When the immense audience that attended the Casino last night left the lobby at the close of the premier exhibition of the Edison Talking Pictures, it was with a general feeling that the Kinetophone has scored—without any attempt at discrimination—the most novel success that has ever yet been attained by any mechanical form of entertainment. The show is one that arouses peculiar interest from the commencement of the programme. The appearance of the lecturer, who demonstrates the accuracy of the device in faithfully recording every sound, opens an entertainment that has curiosity and wonder sustained throughout. The talking pictures are preceded by a film, shown in the ordinary way, with musical accompaniment, after which the "Talkies" are thrown on.

Music and Voice.

The clear, natural tones of the actors as they appear in the different subjects is truly a marvel of genius. In one of the subjects "Sprigs from the Emerald Isle," the dialogue, songs and pipe music are so real—so vivid in its presentation—that the audience forgets the mechanical contrivance, and last night broke into loud and prolonged applause. A reference by one of the performers to the fact that "Ireland will soon have Home Rule," was immediately caught by the spectators and clapped roundly, even though the auditors imperilled the prospect of catching the commencement of the beautiful Irish vocal number that followed.

Baseball Manager Spoke.

John J. McGraw, Manager of the New York Giants, who won the National League Pennant in 1913, was heard in some racy anecdotes of the "Diamond," which he told in his crisp terse way. The colloquialisms gave great pleasure to the local Baseball enthusiasts in the audience. Another "Talkie" that scored a hit was the "Four Blacksmiths"—a vaudeville singing and talking Act that would be a "headliner" at any time.

Appreciate the Novelty.

Every member of the audience last night spoke in most appreciative terms of the Talking Pictures, in all their aspects. The synchronization and marvellous record of human vocalism are features that cannot be overlooked. It is safe to say that many of the pictures should be repeated before the company closes their engagement, while large audiences will attend the balance of the week. There are matinees each afternoon, and the regular performance each evening, commencing at 8.30.

B. I. S. Form Up.

Last night the annual meeting of the B. I. S. football club took place and elected officers for this season, as follows:

Captain—J. Kavanagh.
Vice-Capt. R. Shortall.
League Delegate—J. P. Crotty.
Selecting Committee—E. J. Brophy and R. Shortall.

The B. I. S. team are now hard at practice and will play their first match with the Casuals on Tuesday evening next.

Laska To-Day.

THE SAINT AND THE SINGER TO-MORROW.

The big performance at the Crescent Picture Palace last night, drew large audiences. The feature picture "Laska" is the best two-reel production seen in this city for some time. Two other good pictures a drama and a comedy were equally as well received. "Dear Old Girl" is the song rendered by Sidney Earnshaw and all were delighted. To-night the same pictures and song will be repeated.

TO-MORROW.

"The Saint and the Singer" is the headliner at the Crescent to-morrow, the King's Birthday, and following it are three other up-to-date pictures that should prove a big holiday attraction. Sidney Earnshaw has prepared an appropriate song. The management of the Crescent wish to inform their patrons that the usual prices of admission are the same on holidays as every week day. Afternoons, 5 cents; evenings, 10 cents. See the Saint and the Singer to-morrow, it is the best drama of the day.

Divorced Life

By Helen Hessong Fuesle

A Haunting Subject

Marian sighed with relief when Mrs. Lily purred her word of farewell and left. Then she crumpled up the newspaper clipping which the other had left and sent it spinning into the waste basket.

"That for divorce statistics!" muttered she, as the wad of paper hit its mark. "What do I care if every marriage winds up in the divorce court? These busybodies make me tired," she added mentally.

She dropped into her rocking chair, and reached for the evening paper. Idly she scanned the pages; the day's tale of murder, street fights, disappearances, arrests, and the like did not impress her. Suddenly however her attention was arrested. These were the headlines: "Drastic Attack Upon Easy Divorce."

"Good Heavens," she groaned, "can't I ever get away from the subject! Divorce, divorce, divorce! Everyone's having his say! Well, let's see what's the latest," she mused beginning to scan the article.

A Philadelphia clergyman's interview was the basis of the article. "Feminism runs to hopeless hysteria," she read. "Feminism, co-called, is one of the chief causes for the enormous increase in the divorce rate."

"The highest divorce rate of any country in the world obtains in Japan," the interview ran, "and the next highest is found in the United States. One out of every twelve marriages in this country now ends in divorce. When the divorce movement attains to its modern proportions, we believe that personal, family and social life is threatened and debased beyond palliation. A gusty and passionate courtship may furnish material for a romantic novel, but it is no foundation for the happy and abiding union of two lives. A surrender to mere physical attraction, fine clothes, and delightful conversation is not the stuff of which conjugal love is made."

Marian's gaze wandered down the column, where a sub-head, "The Remedy," attracted her attention. Casually she glanced through the following remedial propositions: "Pledge to wait for a year after engagement before marriage in order that both parties can get an emotional and mental breath—(two-thirds elimination of the cases from the divorce courts is predicted if this plan is followed out); put the idle rich to service or brand them as moral idiots; elimination of hasty, indiscreet or clandestine marriages; single standard of sex morality; a certificate from a reputable physician required from both parties to the contract, showing them to be physically and mentally fit for mating; remodeling of housing conditions; uniform marriage and divorce laws; a true conception of marriage."

Thoughtfully Marian let the paper drop into her lap. It came over her that there was something radically wrong with the laws of a country which married and divorced its people in veritable job-lots, and thereby inflicting upon hundreds of thousands of women much the same woe that it had inflicted upon her.

For a moment, she felt herself dwindle into the merest atom of the big, far-flung social body. She smiled cynically as she thought of scholars and publicists thinking of and for women of her kind. Her effort to generalize, however, was brief. She was not used to the process. She had never thought very seriously in terms of social problems regarding herself. Few women are able to do otherwise. Their intense concern with their own personal problems narrows their horizon.

"Oh, pshaw," she mused. "I'm sick and tired of introspection." She put on her things, and boarded a street car without definite aim. The blazing sign in front of a downtown theatre rivited her attention. She brought a dollar seat and entered. The play was of divorce. She smiled grimly and settled back into her chair. Could she never escape the haunting subject?

To-morrow, Marion Discovers a plot.
