MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES DIPH-

THERIA.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

WHICH ANSWER IS RIGHT?

"How easy your husband is to please. It must be fun to cook for him." I once said to a wife in regard to her husband's taste in food. I had met them at a little restaurant where they were taking their meals while some alterations were being made on their kitchen.

See How Light the Biscuits Are!

The food at the restaurant was far from first class yet the husband seemed always perfectly satisfied. When the wife complained of disadvantages I would point out advantages in the most cheerful way. True the food was more stringy and fatty than it would have chosen, but see how light the biscuits were. To be sure, she only received five cherries for dessert but think what generous things one got of the vegetables, etc.

I was quite charmed with his philosophic attitude. So few men are philosophic about food. On the contrary. Hence my remark above related to his wife.

His wife smiled thoughtfully. "My dear," she said, "on the contrary he is a very difficult man to please at all—quite finical I assure you."

Then why—"

Makes A Point of Liking Things.

Simply because having the kitchen fixed over and coming here it was done was his plan. He always insisted this was a perfectly good place and that anyone who said it wasn't was fussy. There he makes a point of liking things. Do you know how that is?"

Did not only as applied to husbands but as applied to humanity.

I know how it is when anybody makes a point of liking some person.

Nothing that person does is looked through rose colored glasses. The motives are ascribed to him, the most tolerance given to him. And, conversely, when a body makes a point of not liking some person, well you know how impossible it is for anything that person does to be right. His kindest acts have some mean motive behind them. If the possessor of the antipathy can't think of any motive to ascribe he says he feels sure nevertheless that one is there.

Why Some Marriages Are "Successful."

I sometimes wonder if this making a point of liking things does not sometimes enter into so-called successful marriages. (I say "so-called" for I believe any marriage is called successful where the parties stay out of the divorce court and don't find fault with each other to the neighbors.) The wife or husband with a certain kind of pride will make a point of liking whatever the mate (he or she) chooses, says or does. I cannot make up my mind whether I think that sort of pride good or bad. It is good because it makes the world run more smoothly. It is bad because it is founded on self-deception, and it is part of my creed that "seeing true" is the foundation of all right living. Maybe you can solve this problem for me? Tell me which answer is right?

Just Folks to Remember

LET'S KEEP THE HOME IN LAUGHTERLAND.

Let's keep our home in Laughterland.

Where tyranny gives no command; Let's keep all hate and greed away

And dedicate its ground to play. Beneath its roof let nothing mean

Disturb the peace of love serene. Let us not burden it with care,

Nor shelter needless troubles there. But may our home by every test

Become a symbol of our best.

Let's keep our home in Laughterland

Where kindness reigns on every hand; Let's fill it full of small delights

Of happy days and merry nights. Let us not move it into town

Where restless men march up and down

Forever seeking gold and fame. May business never come to claim

A room beneath its humble roof. Let's keep our dwelling commerce proof.

Let's bolt the door and bar the gate

To selfish strife and bitter hate. And when the evening settles down

Let's leave our worries in the town. Let's keep our home secure from sighs

And drooping lips and angry eyes. And cruel words; let us be fair

To them who wait to greet us there. For soon enough the grief will come

To chill the heart and leave it numb.

Let's keep our home in Laughterland.

Unmarred by any vandal hand.

Let us go forth from day to day

To strive for fortune, as we may. Sustained by this triumphant thought

That when at night the fight is fought

And all the petty bickerings cease

We shall return to restful peace. That ' spite of all, our home remains

A haunt where gentle laughter reigns.

Society Butterfly Gone.

Lady Beatty, British Admiral's Wife, Tells of War's Changes.

Lady Beatty, our famous admiral's wife, when someone placed her among those ladies who, before the war, devoted their time to the gay social round denied that she was a society woman, says the Gentlewoman of London.

And, indeed, she is not. An American by birth, brought up in that hive of industry, Chicago, indefinitely impressed with the stamp of the strong, capable woman of affairs, she has little sympathy with the whirl of dinners and dances which comprised life for many English women of the upper classes before August, 1914.

Talking to me on this subject recently she said:

"It was such an utterly different world from the world of to-day. No wonder that many society butterflies almost felt the solid ground knocked from under their feet when the call to arms sounded through the country that summer four and a half years ago. They were like children who had always been kept in a nursery, protected and guarded from any contact with the world. Perhaps they looked out of their high windows and saw other children, less fortunate, playing in the street or working for a livelihood. But they were as so many dreams to the sheltered ones—or like scenes at a theatre, witnessed, but not in any sense lived in. Vaguely they knew of a working, struggling world outside their own, but the thought hardly interested them, and did not really penetrate.

"And then—the war! It was as if the nursery flew open with a chill wind, and blew forth the little inmates into the unfriendly streets. For the first time they brushed shoulders with life as it is lived by millions, and touched the cold hand of reality.

"In some ways it was a terrifying position for these favorites of society. But I shall always be proud of my sex when I remember the way in which they responded to the need of the moment. To-day I suppose there is not a society butterfly of the ugly sort left throughout the length and breadth of England, for one can never apply that name again to a woman who has worked for four years, with heart and soul, nursing the wounded, making munitions in the big factories or driving a car here, there and everywhere on war's business."

HOWE COMPUTING SCALES.

Joseph Ross, Esq., of Harbour Grace, has recently installed one of the latest type Computing Scales, manufactured by the old reliable Howe Scale Company, of Rutland, Vt., U. S. A.

Mr. Ross has been in the grocery business for many years, and is fully satisfied that a good Computing Scale is absolutely necessary in any well conducted grocery.

Mr. Ross will be glad to show his Scale to anyone interested, and explain its advantages over any other springless scale on the market.

In this Scale the load is distributed evenly on all bearings, which every one knows is the only correct principle in scale construction.

This Scale has the new patented dash-pot, which keeps the Scale steady at all times and never requires adjustment.
