Guelph Evening Mercury

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 26.

NORAH CUSHALEEN OR THE HAUNTED CASTLE.

CHAPTER XII.—HARGREAVE IS SEIZED AND CARRIED TO THE MOUNTAINS.

The golden glory of the summer evening was fast fading from the landscape as Hargreave reached the spot where he had appointed to meet Mary Kendal.

Hargreave looked at his watch, and finding that he was too early by several minutes, mounted the stile, and sitting down on the topmost stone, gazed with a grave, serious countenance, across the park in the direction of the building.

Dash, who seemed to have a vivid recollection of the adventure with the bull, in which he had taken so large a share, gave a short, half-suppressed bark, and raised himself against the fence till he was high enough to see over it, when his bright eyes made a quick, eager survey of the park, and lay indolently down among the tall grass at his master's feet.

Hargreave's thoughts were characterized by quiet gratification and hopefulness. His prospects were bright and promising. By a steady and well-spent youth he had built up for himself an honorable character—he had cultivated his whole nature—developed the great capacities within him—made the most of his splendid opportunities—and had thus become strong through the strength which a judicious education imparts.

To crown and complete his nature, the fountain of a deep true love had been opened in his heart, and it now joined its sweet music to fill up the harmony of his life. He had found a nature united to his own—a heart which loved him to himself—and he anticipated no difficulty or opposition. True, Mary's father favored the suit of Malvina Blantire, but was he not in possession of a secret which would cause Malvina to be spurned from Kendal Castle; and was he not this night to make a revelation to Mary which would cause her father to welcome him with all satisfaction.

Pleading himself with these hopeful musings, Hargreave sat upon the stile, gazing dreamily upon the mansion, till the last rays of the setting sun faded from the highest turrets, and passed away from the tree tops, and even vanished from the blue mountains which rose towards the east. Suddenly the youth started, and turning round looked inquiringly along the path by which Mary would come.

She was not visible, and he grew disappointed. Nearly an hour past the appointed time, he murmured; something must have detained Mary. It is now almost dark, and I fear it will be useless to wait longer.

He did wait, however, for a lover is reluctant to leave the spot of rendezvous till all possibility of the meeting is gone. So he sat upon the stile while the twilight deepened around him, and the shades of evening were every moment circumscribing the range of vision.

At length it grew positively dark—at least as dark as a summer night usually grows. Then he rose, and, with the intention of returning to the village, began to saunter slowly along the footpath. Dash ran on before with great alacrity, evidently well pleased that the long vigil had terminated. Dash, you see, was not in love, and did not relish lying so long among the dew. He knew that he could sleep much more comfortably by the fireside of Michael Cushaleen.

Hargreave had not proceeded many paces when he heard a slight rustle behind him, and ere he had time to turn round a powerful grasp was laid on each arm, and he found himself in the power of two strong men in masks, while a third stood by preparing cords to bind him.

Taken completely by surprise, he did not for a moment make any resistance, but the instinct of self-defence soon made him put forth all his strength to shake off those who held him.

Release me, villains; what means this outrage? he cried, and at the same time struggled with all his might. He could not free himself from the grip of his assailants, but he threw them, and all three came to the ground together—Hargreave foremost.

Here he made other desperate efforts at release, but under a greater disadvantage, and though he struggled so, as to make his capture a matter of great difficulty, he was conscious that he must ultimately yield.

As they lay sprawling and writhing on the ground, a huge black object came flying along the pathway, and with a deep growl Dash sprang at the throat of the nearest. He had not time to fasten his teeth when the third ruffian fetched the animal a terrific blow with a cudgel, and the poor beast, uttering a cry of pain, rolled over and over down to the foot of the slope. He was up again in a moment, and came back with fierce determination to the rescue of his master. But at the top of the slope he was met by another cruel blow right upon the forehead and down he went again with a deep groan, and lay motionless at the bottom.

TO BE CONTINUED.

The naval forces of Russia and Turkey employed on the coast of Candia were near coming in collision, relative to the embarkation of Cretan refugees in a Russian war steamer, which was forbidden by an officer of the Porte. The guns were run out from each vessel, when Omar Pacha, from the shore, interfered and prevented a battle. The Russian government forwards an order for the supply of one hundred thousand American rifles. The King of Prussia is to meet the South German rulers in conference at Baden. A grand congress of abolitionists is in session in Paris, America and Africa being largely represented. The Holy Land excursionists were at Odessa. The Spanish government claims that the provincial insurrection has been suppressed, while the insurgents assert that the cause of revolution is making much progress.

Reformers of South Wellington.

Show by your votes that you have no confidence in Sandfield McDonald's "Patent Combination Government." Will you sell all the political privileges which you have heretofore so nobly and victoriously fought for? Then vote early on Friday for the men who will keep down bribery and corruption—men who will see that the new machinery of Confederation is set going economically. Vote for STURTON and GOW.

CONFEDERATION.—In the course of his speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet, the Earl of Derby said:—My Lord Mayor, you must not suppose that this session, much as its attention has been given to the great measure of the representation of the people in Parliament, has been wholly barren of fruits of a different character. We have not allowed our attention to be exclusively devoted to that subject, however engrossing and important it has been. We have succeeded in an object which has been anxiously looked for by successive Governments in consolidating and uniting our various North American Provinces, and we have by that means given, I believe, additional strength to those Provinces—we have given them additional security and promoted their loyalty and attachment to the British throne; and in extending to them the full privilege of citizens, the full enjoyment of the rights of a united people we have in the greatest possible degree consolidated their power and knit them to us by the most endearing tie of mutual interest and affection.

A man named Daniel Price, residing in the Village of Virgill, near Niagara was accidentally shot by the explosion of a revolver a few days since.

Business Education

A practical Business Education has now become a necessity to every young man contemplating a business career. Without this education, Fortune must be the desultory of the education to success.

The Business Education of the British American Commercial College, Toronto, imparts not only a source of pride to the proprietor, but their graduates are at the present time filling positions of honor and responsibility in some of the most important mercantile and Banking Institutions of our country. Strong testimony to the thoroughness of this education can be given from the following letter from J. G. Werts, Esq., President of the Board of Trade:

Toronto, Dec. 15, 1865. Messrs. Musgrave & Wright.—Dear Sirs, I cannot express too strongly my appreciation of your efforts to establish a model house of business. I consider that such a system of yours is of the greatest importance both to the employer and the employed, as it saves the former the time and labor of teaching every new hand, and the latter the waste of time involved in a long apprenticeship. Your admirable system of Business is a complete remedy for this defect, and your great success in this department is manifestly manifested by the air of reality that your students display in their model transactions, and by their unobtrusiveness when they fail to meet their engagements. I can testify to the excellent quality of your system, regulations, and course, having at the present time in the employment of the firm I belong to three young men who were educated at your establishment. Wishing you every success in your laudable enterprise, I remain, dear Sirs, yours, &c., J. G. WERTS.

The first prize for Business Penmanship was awarded this Commercial College at the late Provincial Exhibition in Toronto. Graduates are examined and their diploma signed by a Board of Examiners composed of practical business men. Graduates are also assisted in securing employment on personal application. A circular is regularly published, giving detailed account of system, regulations, terms, &c., and may be had by enclosing stamp and addressing: MUSGRAVE & WRIGHT, Toronto, Ontario.
