of late made himself extremely unpleasant to all neighbors in the vicinity of Dovercourt road. The nuisance referred to is caused by a number of manure heaps, which he is caused by a number of manure heaps, which he has suffered to remain on his premises for a considerable length of time, and to which he is continually adding.

The Royal Grenadiers paraded for battalion drill for the first time this season at the drill shed last night. There was a fair attendance considering the wet weather. Sergeant Over disported himself in one of the new forage caps with which the regiment will be provided. It is a fac simile of the caps worn by the Royal Grenadiers of London, and is very handsome. Another change in dress will be on the epaulet. Instead of the figures "10" a bold white "X" will take their place.

A few changes will be made at the county court will in future be used as the division court will in future be used as the division court toom, and the west room will be "used for the division court purposes. Apartments will be fifted up for Judge McDougall across the hall from the assize court room. A covered passage leading from the yard to Judge Bodd's apartments in rear of the cast court room will be built.

The goods are distributed to the trade direct from the works, thus avoiding the middleman, and as basening the middleman, and a basening and bows. This is an important of the company's system of business and cannot fail to give the utmost satisfaction to consumers.

"Jumbo is fonder of children than most men and women are. He has always been accustomed to them, and they have given him thousands of oranges and tons of sweet buns and peanuts. Once, when I was riding him through the garden in London, he stopped all at once. I told him to go on. He wouldn't move. I switched him. He stood firm. I looked down on the ground, and saw a little wee bit of a child in a white drees lying in the elephant's path. Jumbo put out his trunk, lifted it gently up, laid it to one side, and passed on. I was so gratified at that elephant's conduct that I hordered him a half gallon of hale and gave him a bottle of Irish whisky."

"Jumbo was full of mischief when he was a hurchin. We used to heducate the hanimals in a buildin' in the garden, but Jumbo wouldn't go to school. He liked to run off and climb trees, that elephant did, and many's the time I've seen him in the little branches at the top and climbed up after and carried him down."

"You said that Jumbo liked children?"

"E fairly worships them. 'E once fell in love with a little red-headed gil. It was quite strange, too, for she was very poor and never brought him any peanuts."

Mrs. Langtry sent the buff leather shoes she wears when she is in Rosalind to the shop for repairs in Pittsburg. The fact having been ascertained by the Pittsburg ladies at the Central notel, they prevailed upon the accommodating shoemaker to be allowed to try the shoes on. Much to the disgust of the fair experimenters only one lady was found who could get her feet into Langtry's No. 4's. And yet the average Pittsburg woman is rather proud of her feet.

The Divorce Ban Removed,

From the London Truth. About a year ago it was stated in Truth that the queen contemplated relaxing in certain cases the very rigorous rule which prohibits ladies who have figured in the divorce court (however blamelessly) or who are judicially separated from their husbands, are judicially separated from their husbands, from appearing at court. I understand that by obtaining special leave from the queen therself, ladies of the class who might fairly claim a dispensation in their favor may now pay their duty to her majesty. A lady in this category attended the first drawing-room, and I hear that the queen has sent a kind and gracious message to the Marchioness of Blandford, who, if so objected, will also be at liberty to come to court.
