A cocked hat, and a huge sword made Sheriff Jarvis a very formidable looking person as he conducted Mr. Justice O'Connor to the bench at the opening of the fall criminal assizes yesterday. The names of those composing the grand jury were called as follows: Ald, Harvie, forema : Arthur F. Ogilvey, Edwin H. Kertland, Alexander Henderson, Wm. Deverill, Charles Whitehouse, Anthony Bowes, James Lemon, Robinson Long, Arthur larvey, Thompson Porter, John Millrey, John Forrester, Thomas Lailey, Robert Marshall, Andrew Hood, Edward J. Mussen and Hugh McDonald. Æmilus Irving, O.C. of Hamilton was present to conduct

Q.C. of Hamilton was present to conduc the prosecutions.

Judge O'Connor in his address to the jury congratulated the city and county on the slim calender, and the grand jury on the light duty they had before them. Of the nine cases on the list there was only of a serious character, and even in one of a serious character, and even in that case it was not at all certain that the charge of murder would be sustained. It was a case against an unmarried woman who had given birth to a child, which fact she had concealed. To bring in a true bill of murder, they had to find that the child had been born alive, and its death did not result from natura causes. The jury's duty was not to try the cases, but merely to hear the incriminating evidence. From what he had been told, he did not think it likely that they would bring in a true bill for murder. He then proceeded over the list and explained the charges of manslaughter, embezzlement, larceny and criminal assault. He in-formed the jury that they would, as usual, have to visit the asylum, jail and other similar institutions and report on their condition. "You will also, gentlemen," he said, "take note of this court house. It is surrounded by adjuncts which give us insalubrious smells and make this not an agreeable place for the administration of justice." The grand jury then retired.

The first case called was that against C.

M. Winger, charged with embezzling certain sums of money from the Singer manufacturing company, but as the defence was not ready to go on the case was adjourned until Thursday. The case of Richard Anketell, a policeman, who is charged with assaulting Wm. Atcheson and Edith Roberts, was called but as Atcheson and Edith Roberts, was called, but as Atchsson was not present a bench warrant was issued for An Involuntary Ducking. J. W. Linton, who lives on Robinso street, was going northwards on the new extension of Markham street on Sunday night, and when about half way between Robinson and Queen streets stepped into an open cistern and would undoubtedly have perished had not his cries for assistance been heard by some ance been heard by some persons returning from church. The water, which was over five feet deep, was cold as ice, and he was soon chilled through. There are a good many open cisterns in this piece of open land and they ought to be looked after by the proper authorities.

False Alarm.

The sections of the fire brigade that responded to the call from box 16 last night are not in the best of humor. It appears the proprietor of a patent right ex-tinguisher endeavored to show the merits of his machine in a vacant lot on Pearl street, but being troubled by a gang of hoodlums instructed one of them to sound the alarm. This was done and the brigade had a run through the crowded streets and over the slippery pavement, only to find a few tar covered planks smouldering in a vacant lot.

Siberia at the Grand.

There was a good house last night to see Bartley Campbell's Siberia. The piece was presented by much the same company as played it last winter, with all the im provement that time and experience give. It is full of strong situations, strongly portrayed, and always elicits continuous attention and vigorous plaudits. There is fine and new scenery with the piece, brilliant uniforms, and a specialty in the way of cornet solos by Mr. and Mrs. Petit. See

A New Exchange Office.

The Central methodist church on Bloo street held a most successful Sunday school anniversary last evening under th chairmanship of their talented paster, Rev. Manly Benson. The Rev. Dr. Wild was present, and gave an interesting ad dress, and the children sang the hymns with spirit and genuine melody with the assistance of Mr. Ross, their superintendent. A liberal collection was taken up for the benefit of the school.

world's champion is due to one of two hings-want of condition or arrangement If the latter, then Hanlan is a knave, i If the latter, then Hanlan is a knave, if the former, then he is a fool. In either case he fares badly, and should Beach refuse to give him his revenge, he will place himself in a nice predicament. He will have thrown away a title that cost him years of labor and much money to acquire. Beach, on the other hand, will be the second Australian who has gained the title of champion sculler of the world by a "fluke," rather than his own superior prowess.

Meet of the Toronto Hounds.

To the Sporting Editor of The World. SIR: The hunt of the season took place of aturday afternoon, the meet being in the Queen's park. Between fifty and sixty members assembled at the usual time and with them their friends in carriages and mounted probably numbering as many more. After leaving the park the master led the pack, assisted by the whips, to the property of the late Mr. Baldwin, where the cast was made from a side road. The obstacle first met was a formidable rail fence, which was taken by all in good old country hunting style; from this out it was understood that hard work was ahead. The master in his usual form led his men well up to the front and if he was passed by some of the old members it was due more to his horse than himself. A big ditch bothered a good many, but it was discount. well up to the front and if he was passed by some of the old members it was due more to his horse than himself. Mrs. Carruthers rode in her usual style Mrs. Carruthers rode in her usual style, and was in at the death, The fox was closely pursued and took shelter in a cellar in an old building by the roadside and was secured by the huntsman. The master then asked the huntsman to give the brush to Mr. Murray who had ridden well throughout, and the late to Mr. Donaldson, the vecteran, when by mutual consent it was arranged that the former should cake the brush and the latter the pate.

It was pleasing to see so many members of the club on this occasion in the veritable pink, for it is an accepted fact that a man oink, for it is an accepted fact that a man never rides so straight as when clothed in

A Constable Shot At.

The name of County Constables Waites s a terror to evil-doers all over the county, He was arresting a boy on a charge of arceny at Seaton village on Sunday night, when a well-dressed fellow stepped from the crowd that was following, grabbed Waites by the throat and threw him down and stepped back again into the crowd. As he knew he could not pick out his as-ailant in the crowd Waites jumped up and an after the boy. He had not gone far when the stranger stepping from the crowd and drawing a revolver deliberately shot at the officer, the bullets fortunately passing over his head. Not a man among he crowd had courage enough to stop the fellow who immediately took to his heels and escaped. Waites secured the boy, and then started out on a hunt for his wouldbe murderer. It is thought that the shooting was done by some one interested in the fate of the Cooney-Rourke gang, and who knew that Waites had a pile of evidence that was .yet to come out in court.

Why Charlie Wore His Old Hat

- Why on earth, Charlie, do you wear such a shabby hat, said one gentleman to another,
on the steps of the National club yesterday afternoon. Hush, my boy, said Charlie; little domestic arrangement, you know. Mrs. P., says she won't go out with me until I go get a new tile, and as you are aware that her temper is usualy bad during the moon's first quarter, I just thought I would linger in the cool and pleasant shades of anti-matrimony
for a few-days. Tumble, eh? And Charlie threw a solemn and impressive wink from his left eye into the countenance of his friend,
who at once persuaded him to go to Dineen's,
northwest corner of King and Yonge streets, and get a new silk hat. And now when he goes out Mrs. P. is always at his side.—Advt. Why Charlie Wore His Old Hat
