BE, TREDICKAR'S PILLS. BY J. H. BURNS.

Its own reward in one way, for Dr. Tredictwenty had slipped away, and the babies o whom he had given their first bolus had babies of their own; and fevers, and consumptions, and amputations, and autopsies seemed to Dr. Tredickar nothing worth living for; and worn with work, irregular unhealthy hurries, sympathies, disgusts, fatigues, one morning Dr. Trediokar discovered that he was without appetite, without strength, without a hope or wish, looking on the world as a mass of disease, and saw with hardly surprise or regret that there was no health in him.

Dr Tredickar had scarcely the energy left to set about curing himself; he really did not care. He took one little dose and did not care. He took one little dose and another, and would not have taken them if his aged spinster had not set them by his plate. As he looked about his dull and desolate home he thought that this was the time when a man needed a wife to "obser him, and cursed himself for not thinking of it tempts were age."

him, and cursed himself for not thinking of it twenty years ago.

Dr. Fellows came to see him, and told him he must do so and so; and he did, and grew more listless and melancholy. Then Dr. Harvey came, and said he must do this, and that; and he did, and he felt so much worse that he went himself to see Dr. Field.

And then all three had a consultation, and one said it was the spleen, and one said it was the spleen, and one said it was the kidneys, and he himself was sure it was the liver. And as they could do nothing that had not already been done, they sent him off to the Springs to see what the old earth could do.

But the Virginia Springs did Dr. Tredickar no good—hot, or cold, or sulphur—and the Canadian Springs did him no good, and the Maine Springs did him no good, and the Wermont and Arkansas Springs were equally worthless in his case: and at last he went on his way to the Saratoga Springs, hopeless, listless, wretched, failing generally, and ailing particularly, from mere force of habit trying to get well, and yet not caring whether he did or not, with no object and no aim—simply actuated, as it were, by the instinct of self-preservation, when he encountered Allen in the cars— an old class-mate whom he had not met for years—and, of course, they each had a word to say, and the first topic was health.

"Going to Waukesha?" asked Allen,
"Yos," was the reply.
"Well," consolingly, "it'll do you no good, I tried it. I tried them all, I was in precisely your condition. And look at me to-day—sound as a drum! Now, let me tell you—you can't cure yourself!
You've gone through the faculty. You've nearly gone through the Springs.
Suppose you try them? Now, let me tell you. Tredickar, there's a person in the next town—a sort of doctor—quack, of course—she's cured a good many people—she—I'd just as lief tell you—she cured me!"

It was a comfortable, matronly presence

It was a comfortable, matronly presence he found, but he wasted no second glance or thought upon it, while he detailed the symptoms, and dwelt on them, just as he had so often been impatient with his had so often been impatient with his she said in a low voice:

"I think I can help you, if you will implicitly obev my instructions for the next three months. I will not undertake it without your promise."

The doctor thought a moment, and felt as if he was really willing to promise anything. And he did.

"In the first place, then," said his new adviser. "I want you to make a particular point of your nourishment. You are not to go without eating because you have no appetite, remember. On rising in the morning drink a glass of cold water, not iced. Have a good breakfast; you know best what distresses you least. No coffee nor tea, but shells if you like, No estimustryohnia during the day; no chloral, no lant, no quivine, no quassia, no iron, no promides during the night. At 11 o'clock lant, no quinine, no quassia, no iron, no bromides during the night, At 11 o'clook in the forenoon I wish you to have a raw egg beaten up with milk on one day, on the next day alternate it with a full cup of the next day alternate it with a full cup of strong beef tea or veal tea; on the third day with plain milk. At 1 o'clock vou will dine plainly, but satisfactorily. At 3 o'clock take another glass of milk or beef tea or egg, whichever you did not take in the morning; a plain, but hearty, supper at 6, and between supper and bedtime another glass of milk. If you wake in the nicht, have some milk standing by you to drink; but you won't wake. None of your food should be hot. You will take no other medicine than some which I shall give you. Can you remember all this?"

"Please repeat it."

"Please repeat it."

He was humiliated, but he did so.
"Now, to day, I want you to walk—"
"Walk! It's all I can do to drag one foot after the other pow."
"If want you to walk a quarter of a mile and back," she said, not heeding his interruption "and do that every day for a week. The next week make it a half mile; the next week a whole mile. Keep up that for three weeks, and then every week double your portion till you can do ten miles a day with perfect case,"
"I never oan in the world!"
"Do as I say, if you please, Before

"I never can in the world?"

"Do as I say, if you please. Before starting on your walk take a tepid sponge bath, and on returning from your walk rub yourself down thoroughly with a sannel mitten—I will give you one; then go to bed entirely undressed for a couple of hours, and rub yourself again on rising. Go to bed every night at 10 o'clock, and the in hed ten hours. You are not to open Sannel mitten—I will give you one; then go to bed entirely undressed for a couple of hours, and rub yourself again on rising. Go to bed every night at 10 o'clock, and lle in bed ten hours. You are not to open a book or look in a newspaper for three months—"

"Impossible!"

"Perfectly possible. You have no idea.

"two the next, and three the next. If the three create nausea, step at two, and after a week try the three again. Then I think they will not trouble you."

"What are they made of?" he demanded, bluntly. "Because if there is any calomel in them I won't take them. And podophyaline—"

"Never mind that. De as I say. Come back in three months. There is no fee until you are cured. Good morning."

And the door was opened, and he was on the outside of it, never having been so unceremoniously treated in his life—he, a leading physician of the east, sought far and wide—and he was quite inclined to be yery anory.

and wide—and he was quite inclined to be very angry.

However, Dr. Tredickar was not a man of half-way measures. Having undertaken the thing he decided to finish it. He went off on a prairie farm that he heard of, and he obeyed her instructions to the letter. He was six months instead of three obeying them; but, at the end of that time, hale and hearty, ruddy and robust, without an ache or an ail, he again sought the presence of his adviser.

"I have come," said he, "to thank you, to pay my fee, and to ask you for the formula of your wonderful medicine. I am a physician myself."

"Oh, I knew that, Dr. Tredickar," she said, calmly, lifting off the half-handker-chief of gray and black lace that she wore about her waving and still brown hair.

"You knew that! How——"

"Yes, Dorothy Merle."

Truly! And where had his eyes been?
Dorothy Merle, plumper, rosier, and almost as pretty as—well, perhaps prettier than ever. She had known him at a glance, and she had disguised her voice and walked with a cane, and worn the half-handkerchiefs to mislead him.

"I thought," he said severely, that you were Mrs. Taylor."

"No," she replied, "I have never married; I assumed the name."

"And you will assume another before this sun sets!" he cried; "do you think I am going back to the east alone? How could you, how could you leave me on that oruel day?"
