The Stolen Portemonnaie She Forgave the Thief

> Twice By LILLIAN SHARPE

A young lady sat in a waiting room railway station watching the clock as its hands moved slowly toward the time of departure of her train. Presently she turned to a satcher on the seat beside her, placed it on her lap, opened it and took out her portemonnaie, which she laid in the place where her satchel had been.

A young man with curly auburn hair and brown eyes was sitting at the other end of the seat and observed that the girl had forgotten to put her portemonnaie back into the satchel. kept his eyes on her and it until suddenly a railroad official called.

"Train for Hampton!" The young lady started, glanced at the clock, saw that the hands stood at fifteen minutes before her train time, remembered that trains are opened to travelers some time before they leave and, grasping her satchel, hurried away. Seeing the words "Ticket Office" over a window, she remembered that she had forgotten to provide herself with a ticket and, turning aside, took position at the end of a line of several persons.

"If that isn't just like a woman!" said the young man with auburn hair to himself, and, reaching for the portemonnaie, he put it in his pocket and followed her, taking position next to her in the line. When it came her turn to purchase a ticket she asked for one to Hampton, at the same time opening her satchel. First there was a quick movement of the top articles, then a plunge of the hand down into the bag, after this a convulsive stirring up of everything.

"Oh, heavens, I've been robbed!" "Permit me to pay your fare," said the young man behind her, and, taking out his wallet, he bought a ticket for her and one for himself. Then they both made room for those behind them "What shall I do?" wailed the girl.

"You had better get aboard the train. You haven't time to investigate the oss of your portemonnaie, and it would probably avail nothing if you had. Was there much in it?"

"Only $7.53, four postage stamps and "What exactness! I wish I could remember things like that. Never mind. I have advanced the amount for your ticket. You haven't lost very much. Good morning." And he lifted his hat deferentially.

the girl would not let him go without asking his address that she might turn his loan. She asked him for it, and he said that it would be more convenient for him to give it to her in the train, so the two went on. He handed her on to the car, took a seat beside her and, producing a card bearing his name, Nathaniel Meriweather, his address on it and handed it to her. "Why, you live in Hampton!" she exclaimed.

"I don't live there, but I am going there."

That he was going there was perfectly true, but when he had entered the station he had just left he had no such intention. He was going to his home, fifty miles beyond. "But you have given your street and number there." "That's the address of a friend."

The girl put the card in her satchel, and Mr. Meriweather took up the matter of the lost portemonnaie.
"Was any one," he asked, "near you while you were in the station?" "No one near enough to get posses sion of anything that belonged to me Now. I think of it, some one was sitwhile I was waiting for the train." "Man or woman?"

"I think it was a man." "Did you take out your portemonnale while he was there?"

"Yes, I did. I tired of waiting and took out this magazine." She still held it in her hand. "To do so I was obliged to remove the portemonnale and some other things which I laid beside After getting out the magazine I put them all back again into the bag." "Are you sure you put them all back?"

"Perfectly." "Then there can be no doubt about the matter. The man who sat beside you must have been an expert at sleight of hand and contrived to get your pocketbook away from you. I was in the station and saw a man sitting beside you."

"How careless of me! Could you identify the man?"

"I think I could." "What was he like?" "Well, he was not a very attractive wouldn't have looking person, but I taken him for a thief." "Did you notice his features?" "I noticed one feature. He was a red headed chap." The young lady cast a side glance at companion's hair. "Anything else?" she asked.

"Nothing especial. He was looking at you admiringly. I wonder that he stole from you."

A girl can't help being pleased at admiration even from a thief. The young lady instinctively put her hand to her back hair. Not long after this, when the train was nearing Hampton, Mr. Meriweather thought it better that he should have the young lady's address; he might neet the man who he declared had stolen her pocketbook and if he did it would be essential that he communicate with her. She gave him her name, Alice Deane, and her address. When Hampton was reached Mr. Meri-weather handed Miss Deane off the train, and they parted. The next day the former received from the latter the amount he had expended for her ticket. Within a week Mr. Meriweather wrote Miss Deane that he had seen the man who sat beside her in the station, had shadowed him and learned where he lived. Should he have the fellow arrested? Miss Deane replied that if Mr. Meriweather could induce the thief to return a sample of ribbon there was in the pocketbook he was welcome to the rest of the contents. The next day Mr. Meriweather rang the doorbell of Miss Deane's home and sent up his card. She came down to receive him becomingly dressed, and as she entered the room he held out the missing sample. She received it

"So the man who stole my portemonnaie," she said, "was he who sat be side me in the station?" "He was."

"And he was quite willing, I suppose to give up the sample on condition that he might keep the other things." 'Yes.

"That was very nice of him." "Was there anything else in the portemonnaie that you especially de-

"No; there were only the money, a few addresses and the samples. The addresses I know, and the other samples I don't care for." "The fellow seems quite willing to return everything except the money. He seems to have admired you."

'And yet he stole my portemonnaie!' "You are wrong in permitting him to go free; you are encouraging vice." "Do you really think so?"
"I do, indeed. I consider it my duty.

being cognizant of his criminal act, to Inform the police of it."

"And would he have to go to jail?" She raised her eyes to Meriweather's pityingly. He would have liked to take her in his arms and confess that he was chaffing her, but that time had not yet come.

Yes; he would have to go to jail and that would surely make a criminal of him for life."

"Don't do it." "How would it do for him to come to you, confess his crime, restore the other articles and throw himself on your mercy? You could tell him how wicked he had been and picture to him his end if he continued in crime. Then you could forgive him, and he might hereafter live a blameless life."

"I think that would do very nicely. It would be infinitely preferable to sending him to jail." Mr. Meriweather left after a two hours' visit, promising to propose the plan he had suggested to the thief and ask if he would consent to make restitution and ask forgiveness. Miss Deane would be advised of the result.

A few days later Mr. Meriweather called and handed Miss Deane the

In fact, one evening after a visit that was prolonged till midnight Miss Deane consented that Mr. Meriweather should go to her father to ask for her hand. The suitor, being an estimable gentleman and a good catch, received the required consent. and the couple became duly engaged.

A short time after the betrothal Mr. Meriweather announced to his fiancee that the next evening the penitent thief would call upon her to restore the remainder of the stolen property, listen to a lecture on his dishonesty and receive her forgiveness. When the appointed time came round there was a ring at the doorbell, and a man in an ulster, wearing a heavy beard and glasses, was admitted to the Deane residence. Miss Deane came down, and the stranger in a broken voice said: "Pardon me for a miserable sinner He bowed his head and waited. "I have been told that this is your first criminal act," said the girl, "and I sincerely hope that it will prove your last. You may have a sweet heart, and think how glad you will make her by your reformation. You are forgiven."

The man threw off his ulster, tore away his beard and his glasses, and her lover stood before her.

"The confession," he said, "comes after your forgiveness. You left your portemonnaie on the seat in the station. and I picked it up. I did so for an excuse to make your acquaintance and prolonged the deception to win you."

Miss Deane stood thunderstruck for a few moments, then turned and was striding indignantly out of the room when the penitent caught her around the waist and held her despite her struggles to be free till she recovered something of her calmness. "You have forgiven me!" cried her lover. "You can't go back on it." But she did go back on it, and it was two long days before she repeated the forgiveness spoken to the supposed thief. She does not even now, ten years after the episode, refer to it pleasantly.

Cigars That Last.

Ever smoke an Igorrote cigar? Well, these Igorrotes, in the Philippine Islands, make a cigar that in one respect is like the old time Christmas plum pudding—it lasts a week. It's fifteen inches long and three to five inches thick. Old man the relief the given and works at a company to the c Ig. rolls the cig. and smokes it an hour; then Misses Ig. and all the little Igs. take their turn. By about the fourth day it must need a cuspi-dor attachment to keep it in opera-tion. One smoke like this would last some people a lifetime.

An Apology. An excited military-looking gentle-man entered the editorial sanctum one afternoon, exclaiming: "That no-tice of my death is false, sir. I will horsewhip you within an inch of your life, sir, if you don't apologize in your next issue."

The editor inserted the following next day: "We extremely regret to announce that the paragraph in our last issue which stated that Major Blazer was dead is without foundation.'

There was another two hours' chat, after which Mr. Meriweather departed, intimating that he expected the next time he came to
