THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD. Be but a mournful sound,

Though for their sakes this earth no more As it hath been may be, And shadows never marked before, Brood o'er each tree.

And though their image dim the sky, Yet, yet forget them not! Nor when their love and life went by, Forsake the spot!

They have a breathing influence there. A charm, not elsewhere found, Sad-yet it sancufies the air, The stream, the ground.

Then through the wind an altered tone Through the young foliage boar, Though every flower, of something gone, A tinge may wear,

Oh! fly it not ! no fruitless grief Thus in their presence lelt, A record links to every leaf There, where they dwelt.

Still trace the path which knew their tread, thenegative. Sill tend their garden bower, And call them rack, the holy dead, To each lone hour !

The holy dead ! oh ! blest we are. That we may name them so, And to their spirits look afar, Through all our woe!

B'est that the things they loved on earth, As relics we may had By springs untield !

Blest that a deep and chastening power Thus o'er our soals is given, If but to a bird or song or flower Yet all for Heaven! January 29, 1839.

MY MOTHER.

Whose was that eye whose loving beam First fell upon my infant face? Whose light comes back in many a dream Ot days, that time can ne'er efface ! It was those own : I know no other. Could match thy loving eje, my Mother.

Whose was that tender voice, that moke Sweet words of gracious love to me ! That round my pillow nightly broke The silence with soft minstraley? It was thine own: I know no other, Could match thy tender voice, my Mother.

Whose was that hend, that wiped the sear From off my cheek, and round me still, In faint sorrow hovered near, Some soothing office to tuifit?
It was thine own: I know no other Could match thy gentle hand, my Mother.

But now those loving eyes are closed; That tender voice has lost its tone; Those gentle hands have long reposed In dust ; and I in sadness own That though I've many friends, no other Can be the friend thou wert, MY MOTHES. That a Committee be appointed on the part wounding coveral other animals.

Forget them not! though new their name. Though by the hearth its ulterance claim A sullness round.
