The Death of Miss Murphy.

The Death of Miss Merphy.

The London Universe says: Some of our London dailies, notably The Daily Mail, have been striving to fan the fiame of anti-Catholic bigory during the week over the circumstances in connection with the sodden death of a Mise Murphy was wealthy and unfortamently addicted to insidigence in strong drinks no one can deny. But if a Catholic priest does his best to wean such a person from a dangerous habit like that why should he be put before the public in a light anything but favorable? Father Smullens seconn manied Miss Murphy to America. the public in a light anything but favorable? Father Smullens accompanied Miss Murphy to America. Would the bigots of England have a girl of nineteen or twenty to ravel alone without a friend, adviser, or protector, and that such a distance as from England to America (the young lady's native land, her parents being Galifornian millionaires). Mach acquisal is cought to be made out of the fact that Miss Murphy willed a large part of her roperty to Father Smullen. But not aven the bitterest of our anti Catholic dailies can say, or even hint, that the father had the slightest knowledge of the fact that she was making her will. Miss Murphy's money was her own. If she had willed it to a form for lost cate the bigots would appland; but because she willed it to a friend and a father for good and worthy purposes ahe is condemned. This, it strikes us, is worthy of the enemies of the Church, who can see nothing but evil where the better disposed see much of goodness and tender charity.

The Late Archbishop Plunket.

The Late Archbishop Plunket.

The Dublin Freeman's Journal pays the fellowing tribute to the lake Protestant Archbishop of Dublin:

"Lord Plunket's rule over his Protestant See was remarkably free from disturbance, polanical or political. He gave active and earnest help to the charitable, educational and temperance—genisations of the Protestant community of Dublin, and indeed was a hard and realous worker in all departments of his duty as Protestant Archbishop. It is due to Lord Plunket to state that he seemed very willing so join with Catholice in any movement for the well being of the people of Dublin, or for the advancement of any philanthropic project which was worthy of general support. A manner invariably courteous, natural kindness, and a certain charm of manner, made many sincere friends for the Archbishop outside his own community, and we believe he was a frequent and welcome guest at social gatherings which included many leading Catholic pursonages elerical and lay."
