

- A positive assessment leads to preapproval by the CCC and the exporter's financial institution for pre-shipment financing. Negotiations can then begin with the customer, within parameters agreed to by the exporter and the CCC.
- The CCC will normally assume the role of prime contractor in the transaction to provide the performance assurance on which progress payment financing is based.
- Once a deal is in place, the CCC will work with the exporter, monitoring progress in completing the contract. The exporter's financial institution will release progress payments according to the progress of the work as well as the incurred project costs.
- The CCC will collect from the exporter's customer and remit payments to its financial institution.
