

NINTH THOUSAND

BACHELORS' BUTTONS

"A pleasant entertainment our reader has had through 'Bachelors' Buttons' It is quite a delightful sentimental farce."—Daily Chronicle.

"An artfully artless autobiography of a bachelor whose shyness is abnormal His experiences are broadly farcical, though now and again he attains real pathos."—Athenaeum.

"Mr. Jenkins is a new publisher, and if this is an example of the books we may expect from him we can heartily congratulate the publishing world upon its new member,"—Nottingham Daily Express.

"It is uncommonly humorous and uncommonly entertaining, with an exquisite play of original observation and tender whimsical feeling. I can recommend it as a tonic for convalescents."—Bookman.

"Mr. Edward Burke is a public benefactor. His new book 'Bachelors' Buttons' is one of the most delightful stories I have read for a long time. It is humour of the best kind—gay, whimsical, irresistible."—Daily Citizen.

"Not the most hardened novel reader could resist the quaint, pathetic, but most lovable bachelor who tells this story . . . The story is narrated in a manner full of quaint humour, touched occasionally with a subtle pathos."—Modern Society.

"Mr. Jenkins is fortunate in his discoveries of new writers of promise. These 'candid confessions of a shy bachelor' make excellent reading and disclose qualities of humour of no mean order in the author We have laughed right through the volume."—Outlook.

"'Bachelors' Buttons' is one of those nice, refreshing, jolly books that sweeten the hours Chock full of humour. One of the most chuckle provoking books. Well, I congratulate Mr. Herbert Jenkins very heartily upon his most successful choice, and Mr. Edward Burke I thank with every laughter-loving bit of me."—Clarion.

"In Mr. Burke a new humourist has certainly been discovered. . . . This is a delightful book, remarkable for its freshness, and for a certain amiable affection for the whole world that is pleasant to watch . . . Sure to delight a large circle . . . A wholesome laughter-provoking book, certain of a large circulation."—Standard.
